Sadat says Tohami spoke for himself

By ANAN SAFADI
Post Mideast Affairs Editor

Egyptian President Anwar Sadat yesterday dismissed the anti-Jewish statements made by Deputy Premier Mohammed Hassan Tohami as a personal expression which did not reflect Cairo's official concept.

The Egyptian leader said that he did not agree with Tohami's pronouncements. He made the remark to the editor of Cairo's "October" magazine, Anis Mansour, who was contacted by The Jerusalem Post by phone. Mansour was asked for Sadat's reaction to Premier Menahem Begin's announcement that Israel would lodge an official protest to Egypt against Tohami's statements.

Premier Begin ordered the protest to be dispatched by midafternoon yesterday from the Foreign Ministry in Jerusalem to the Foreign Ministry in Cairo.

Begin told the Foreign Press Association earlier in the day that he did not want to engage in a public tiff with the Egyptian deputy premier; but he added that he had found Tohami's remarks "curious, almost incomprehensible." They contravene the spirit of peace between the two countries, Begin said.

"Tohami spoke for himself," said Mansour, who usually meets Sadat on Thursday for the political wrapup in his weekly magazine. "The position of official Egypt is clear and was made well known to the entire world," he added in a return phone call to The Post.

Tohami, in his interview with Kuwait's "A-Siyassa" newspaper, predicted the imminent collapse of the "demi-state, Israel," adding that he deduced from conversations with Jews and from Koranic texts that the end of Israel as a "Jewish state set upon plundered Moslem soil" was not far off. He also claimed that Jews were "treacherous and hypocritical," and it was no wonder that they had always been portrayed as such in history books.

Another presidential confidant, who asked that his name be withheld, said that Israel ought not to attribute much importance to Tohami's anti-Israeli outburst, saying: "We certainly do not agree with him there."

When asked whether he expected Sadat to take any steps against Tohami, the confidant said he didn't think so. "I don't know. It is true that he is a senior official, but don't you forget that he is also a deeply religious dignitary who voiced his controversial statements as such." Besides, he added, Tohami made his statements in a Kuwaiti newspaper — not in Egypt.

The confidant added that he doubted whether Sadat would approach Tohami, saying that Israeli dignitaries too make occasional statements which are detrimental to the spirit of peace between the two countries.

The confidant at one stage referred to Tohami's statements as "a mistake." He nevertheless cautioned that Israelis must not be "jumpy" over expressions by religious people who base themselves on Koranic texts, saying that Jews were only in 1963 cleared by the Vatican of having crucified Jesus.

JUDY SIEGEL adds:

Israel's ambassador-designate to Cairo, Dr. Eliahu Ben-Elissar, said yesterday that Tohami's "anti-Israel, anti-Zionist and perhaps anti-Semitic" statement "does not reflect the views of President Anwar Sadat."

Emerging from the office of President Yitzhak Navon after an hour-long conversation and having received his letters of credence for presentation in Cairo, Ben-Elissar said, "There is no question that Sadat did not know beforehand of Tohami's intention to make the statement."

"I know exactly what status Tohami has and what the extent of his influence is," Ben-Elissar told waiting reporters. "I'm sure that he didn't consult with Sadat about it. I wouldn't get excited about such statements."

The ambassador-designate added that he was sure the process of normalization between Egypt and Israel would not be held up because of Tohami's remarks.

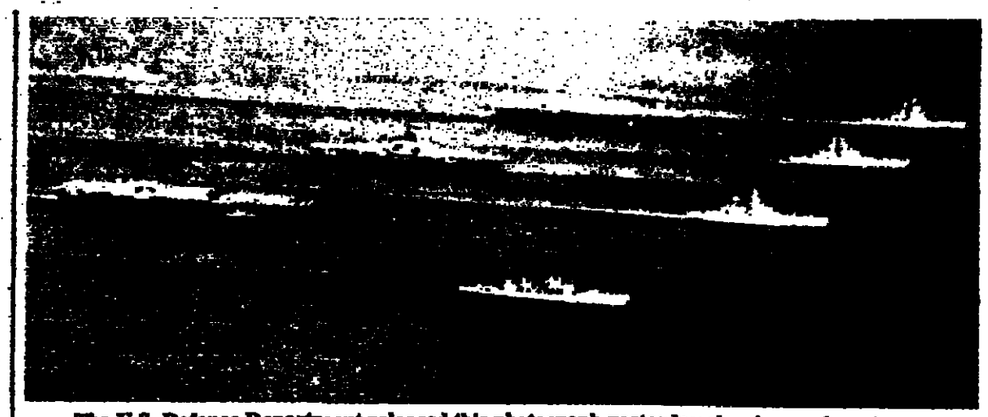

Ben-Elissar, who was accompanied by his wife Nitza, said his discussion with Navon and his wife Ofira was "excellent" and that he had "learned a lot" from the president, who "knows a great deal about the Arab world."

PLO, Andrew Young helping to negotiate deal

Iran may free U.S. hostages soon

By WOLF BLITZER
Jerusalem Post Correspondent

WASHINGTON. — Using UN Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim, former UN ambassador Andrew Young, the PLO and others as intermediaries, the U.S. and Iran last night appeared to be moving towards an agreement which would enable the 50 American hostages in Teheran to be released shortly.

One scenario described to The Jerusalem Post by two usually reliable U.S. sources had the hostages being flown to Algeria in the next few days while an international tribunal in Teheran opens an investigation into the deposed shah's activities.

The hostages, under this scenario, would remain in Algeria while the proceedings against the shah continued, although they might be released after a few days as a goodwill gesture.

Another possibility, according to the sources, has Young and PLO chairman Yasser Arafat flying to Teheran for talks with President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr and the "student militants" holding the hostages at the U.S. embassy.

U.S. officials yesterday said that Bani-Sadr "clearly has no interest in holding on to the hostages." But the officials described the "students" as remaining firm in their demand that the deposed shah be returned to Iran.

Sources here described the views of Ayatollah Khomeini as clearly the "determining factor" in the dispute between Bani-Sadr and the militants.

A Kuwaiti newspaper yesterday reported that a breakthrough on the hostage situation was imminent, but U.S. officials could not confirm that report. Under Secretary of State Warren Christopher hinted, however, that a "somewhat promising" situation had developed and the U.S. was working hard to follow through on it.

These diplomatic arrangements, which the sources warned might yet fall apart if a last-minute snag should develop, have been meticulously negotiated in recent weeks but received critical impetus following President Bani-Sadr's election.

Young, who has good relations with the Iranian leaders as well as the PLO, is currently on a supposedly "private" visit to Africa. But sources here insisted his journey was arranged carefully in connection with the ongoing efforts to release the hostages, now in the fourth month of captivity.

In an apparent gesture of goodwill, the State Department yesterday announced that the U.S. would not impose economic sanctions against Iran as it had planned.

"We don't want to take the formal steps toward sanctions if the crisis can be resolved by (diplomatic activity)," State Department spokesman Hodding Carter said.

In Teheran, President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr, locked in a battle with Moslem students occupying the U.S. embassy, last night was appointed head of the ruling Revolutionary Council with executive powers over the nation's affairs.

Council spokesman Hassan Habibi said the decision was approved by revolutionary leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, who is recovering in a Teheran hospital from a heart ailment.

Further escalating his attacks last night on the Moslem militants holding the American hostages, Bani-Sadr also moved to prevent them from using Iranian airwaves to state their case.

Premier 'may well run for re-election'

By DAVID LANDAU

Prime Minister Menahem Begin said yesterday that he might run for re-election "if the members of the Likud put their confidence in me." The premier spoke in response to a question at a Foreign Press Association luncheon in Jerusalem.

Sources close to Begin said afterwards this was the first time since his mild stroke last summer that the prime minister had spoken publicly about the prospect of his leading the Likud into the elections once again. The poll is due in autumn of 1981, and the premier will then be 69.

During the early months of his premiership, Begin was wont to tell interviewers that he planned to retire at the age of 70 — by implication just after the next election — and devote himself to writing. But since his chain of heart illnesses and his mild stroke he ceased referring to the subject in public, and the general assumption was that he would step down at the end of this term.

Several recent public opinion polls show the Likud doing much better under Defence Minister Ezer Weizman than under Begin. Mina Zemach, a leading pollster, found that the Likud under Begin would trail the Labour-Mapam Alignment by some 20 Knesset seats. But under Weizman, the gap — were elections to be held today — would be reduced to three seats.

Political observers predicted yesterday that the premier's statement regarding future prospects would have long-term repercussions within the Likud — and perhaps within Labour too, where Weizman is regarded as a far more dangerous foe than Begin.

Next autonomy talks won't be in Paris

Post Diplomatic Correspondent

The Linowitz-Burg-Khalil autonomy session scheduled for later this month will not be held in Paris — despite persistent press stories that it will. Israeli officials said yesterday that France had not been asked to host the talks, nor would it be asked. Likelier venues are London or Geneva, the officials said.

Vietnam defence chief Giap reported sacked

MOSCOW (UPI). — In a top-level government shakeup, General Vo Nguyen Giap was sacked yesterday as Vietnam's defence minister, and Nguyen Duy Trinh was relieved as foreign minister, the Tass news agency reported.

Syrians start Beirut pullout

Begin: Israel won't attack; we're watching

Jerusalem Post Staff and Agencies

Prime Minister Menahem Begin yesterday said that Jerusalem has no aggressive designs against Syria, but he stressed that Israel was on guard and watching current Syrian troop movements in Lebanon very closely.

Referring to reports that Syrian troops had yesterday begun pulling out of Beirut for redeployment in the eastern countryside, Begin told a Foreign Press Association luncheon in Jerusalem that Syria's intentions were unclear.

"We don't know the purpose of these changes," he said.

He also reiterated Israel's determination to protect the Christians in Lebanon "if they are in danger."

According to reports from Beirut yesterday, the Syrian move has set off alarms in the Lebanese capital, where the Palestine Liberation Organization pledged to resist the city's takeover by Lebanese government troops "unless they first occupied Christian militia strongholds."

Lebanese President Elias Sarkis and Premier Selim al-Hoss were reported to have met last night with top aides to finalize plans to replace the Syrian troops who have been policing most Lebanese towns since putting a stop to the civil war in 1976. But as the Lebanese leaders conferred, they received reports of outbreaks of bloody clashes between rival Christian militias in northern Lebanon.

A spokesman for the Phalange Party, which fielded the largest Christian militia in Lebanon's 1975-76 civil war against an alliance of local Moslems and Palestinian terrorists, said one Phalangist was killed and three were wounded in the northern flare-up.

He accused the "giants" militia of former Christian president Suleiman Franjieh of mounting a daybreak attack on two pro-Phalange villages 80 km. north of Beirut.

Franjieh, who ruled Lebanon during the 19-month civil war, split with the Phalange Party after Syria's military intervention in November 1976.

Phalangists and their National Liberal allies of ex-president Camille Chamoun resented the Syrian control of Christian areas and mounted military campaigns in 1978 to drive the Syrians out. Franjieh sided with the Syrians.

A spokesman for the governor's office in the Mediterranean city of Sidon, meanwhile, said Israeli gun-

Terrorists repelled in North

Post Military Correspondent

A routine Israeli patrol foiled an infiltration attempt by terrorists into Western Galilee from Lebanon early yesterday morning. One Israeli soldier was slightly wounded by grenade fragments in the brief firefight.

The incident occurred around 2 a.m. yesterday north of Kibbutz Eilon. This was the first terrorist infiltration attempt from Lebanon in about six months.

According to an announcement from the army spokesman, the terrorists, who are believed to have numbered four, were stopped on the Lebanese side of the border. After a short exchange of fire which left one Israeli slightly wounded, the terrorists managed to slip away into the darkness. They left four satchels of explosives and three sets of combat gear behind them.

The terrorists apparently managed to infiltrate past Dutch UNIFIL and Christian militia positions before being stopped by the Israeli patrol.

Observers yesterday noted that for the past two weeks there has been a sharp increase in the number of incidents between terrorists and the Christians militias.

Israeli military circles said they had been expecting an infiltration attempt by land into Israel for some time, and early yesterday morning were apparently not caught by surprise.

Reuter reported from Beirut that more than 100 Israeli troops crossed into Southern Lebanon after the clash. A UN spokesman said a seven-man Israeli unit was intercepted by Dutch troops in the UN peace-keeping zone.

Hebron curfew easing but still in force

By IAN BLACK
Jerusalem Post Reporter

The curfew in the centre of Hebron will be eased over the weekend, but it is unlikely to be lifted completely until after Sunday, when Kiryat Arba residents plan "a formal proclamation of the return of the Jewish people" to the city.

The curfew, imposed last Thursday after the murder of Jehoshua Sloma of Kiryat Arba, was lifted from 7 a.m. to 3 p.m. yesterday. Several hundred Arabs from Hebron crossed the Green Line to work in Israel for the first time in a week.

It had been thought that the curfew would be lifted completely yesterday, after a meeting on Wednesday between Hebron Mayor Fahd Kawasma and Judea and Samaria commander Tat Aluf Binyamin Ben-Eliezer. But no such decision has yet been reached. It appears that the government will have the final word.

The curfew, which embraces the centre of the town and the market where Sloma was shot twice at close range, will be lifted from 1 p.m. to 6 p.m. today and from 11.30 a.m. to 4 p.m. tomorrow. On Sunday it will be in force from 11 a.m. throughout the rest of the day.

The timing of the restriction is clearly designed to prevent weekend friction between Jewish and Moslem worshippers in the Cave of Machpelah, which houses both a mosque and a synagogue.

Leaflets meanwhile circulated in Kiryat Arba yesterday calling for

Sabbath violence looms on Ramot road

By ROBERT ROSENBERG
Jerusalem Post Reporter

The Ramot neighbourhood council held an emergency meeting last night, after religious extremists warned that anyone driving along the road to the north Jerusalem suburb tomorrow will be "doing so at the risk of his life."

Yossi Yedid, a council spokesman, told The Jerusalem Post that Ramot residents are counting on police protection. But, he added, the residents will "take whatever measures are necessary" to protect people driving on the road over the Sabbath.

Ramot council sources said they were convinced that the threat, made by Natorei Karta spokesman Rabbi Moshe Hirsch, is not supported by the residents of Ezrat Tora and Kiryat Zanz, the religious neighbourhoods bordering the road.

Ramot and Kiryat Zanz leaders signed a "peace treaty" in December following a series of Sabbath confrontations when stones were thrown at passing cars. The treaty, which was witnessed by Jerusalem Mayor Teddy Kollek and Interior Minister Yosef Burg, anticipated the construction of a by-pass which would allow cars to travel to Ramot out of the view of Kiryat Zanz and Ezrat Tora.

But Natorei Karta, which is based in Mea Shearim and was not a signatory to the treaty, said that the failure to press ahead with the construction of the road made a "mockery" of the city's religious population.

Natorei Karta has claimed responsibility for laying cement-bottomed nails as tire-busters on the road last weekend. Rabbi Hirsch warned earlier this week that "the nails will be like sweet dreams" when compared to the action planned by his sect this weekend.

The police spokesman was unavailable for comment last night, but Ramot sources said that the police had been informed.

Observers said that violence at the road this weekend could be prevented if city officials sent bulldozers today to the site that has been earmarked for the by-pass, to show that it will soon be constructed.

City officials have estimated that the by-pass will cost IL75m. and will take approximately a year to complete.

Boycott issue makes ripples at Lake Placid

Jerusalem Post Staff and Agencies

LAKE PLACID, New York. — Chiefs gathered here yesterday to discuss the Olympic Games crisis over Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, as the U.S. said that nearly 50 countries were backing President Jimmy Carter's call to have the summer Games moved from Moscow in protest.

Lord Killanin, Irish president of the International Olympic Committee, told reporters here that the world sports body was facing its most critical period, but declined to say what action the IOC would take over Carter's call for a boycott.

The IOC executive board, here for the Winter Olympics next week, began a study of Olympic problems yesterday.

Killanin has meanwhile suggested that a discussion on Greek Premier Constantine Karamanlis' proposal that Greece be the permanent site of the Olympic Games should be held in 1981 during an Olympic congress.

In a reply to Karamanlis, made public in Athens yesterday, Killanin said that the premier's proposals are included on the agenda for the IOC meeting in Lake Placid, "but there are many problems to be discussed there."

The Israel Olympic Committee is continuing to maintain a "wait and see" attitude regarding Israel's participation in the Moscow Games, and will not at present respond to the Association of National Olympic committees' call to its 141 member nations to reject out of hand Carter's boycott call.

However, the unanimous "pro-Moscow" resolution of the association's 19-man executive council in Mexico City on Tuesday will obviously be taken into account by the IOC, committee president Yitzhak Ofek told The Jerusalem Post yesterday.

Ofek said that the IOC plenary will convene again within the next three weeks to resume discussion on the boycott.

In Lagos, former heavyweight boxing champion Muhammad Ali, now trying to rally black Africa behind Carter's call for a boycott, encountered new trouble yesterday when Nigeria's chief of state decided against meeting the American visitor.

President Alhaji Shehu Shagari had been expected to meet Ali.

The officials also said they had been unable to arrange a meeting scheduled for today between Ali and the Nigerian Olympic Committee.

Police terror unit to fight crime

By DAVID RICHARDSON
Jerusalem Post Reporter

The special police anti-terrorist unit has been deployed to fight serious crime, by order of Inspector-General Herzl Shafir.

The unit, which is composed of highly trained ex-soldiers was set up within the Border Police when responsibility for internal security was delegated to the police after the 1974 Ma'alot terrorist attack. The unit's skills include coping with situations where terrorists attempt to bargain hostages for military or political concessions.

During the first stage of the long-term planning initiated by Shafir when he took office on January 1, Border Police officers revealed, large sums of money went to maintaining the unit which, apart from the capture of eight escaped prisoners from Ramle jail, apparently has not had anything else to do. In addition, a large proportion of the police development budget has been allocated to building a new operational base for the unit in the centre of the country. It is still to be completed.

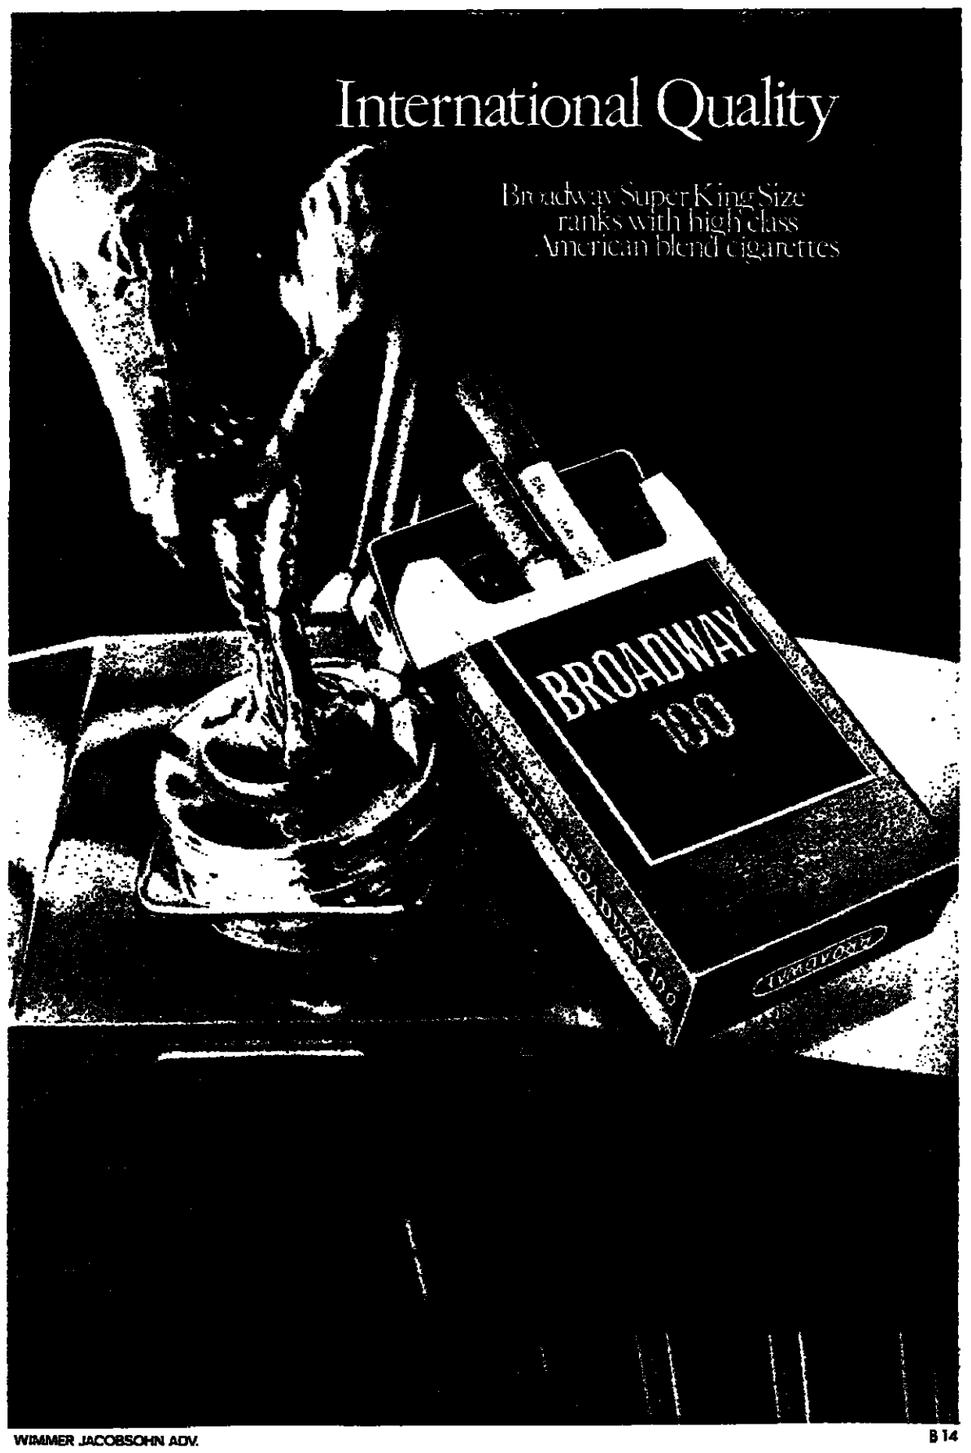

Shafir recently observed a demonstration exercise in which the unit showed off its capability in storming a building ostensibly held by terrorists.

In what appears to be his first operational move since taking office, Shafir ordered that squads of the unit be deployed in certain problematic towns in the Coastal Plain and in the Tel Aviv area for specific purposes and without compromising their normal alert status and quick-response capability.

The squads bolster local units in battling serious crime such as extortion and armed robbery as well as in other situations where violence is likely.

A senior source explained that Shafir felt that the unit should "earn its keep" within the police and that it would gain experience by being deployed in a variety of situations instead of merely "sitting around."

"In effect," the source explained, "Shafir was extending the model of the unit's role in recapturing the convicts to cover a variety of police activities."

Quick agreement seen on Israel-Egypt aviation pact

By DAVID LANDAU

The aviation negotiations between Israel and Egypt are proceeding briskly in Cairo, and Israeli officials are confident of a quick agreement.

Israel's delegation chief, Transport Ministry Director-General Ehud Shilo, phoned in a brightly optimistic report yesterday, referring to a warm and businesslike atmosphere in the talks. His team includes El Al officials and a Foreign Ministry representative.

Once the substantial issues of flights, routes and schedules have been worked out, the legal aides will get down to work drafting the accord. It is likely to be the first of the package of bilateral agreements between Israel and Egypt to be worked out in the weeks ahead.

The Cairo government has decided against using its national carrier, EgyptAir, for flights to and from Israel for fear Arab countries opposed to the treaty might boycott the company, which operates in most Arab states. Egypt, instead, will establish a small new company for the purpose. El Al is expected to operate on the line between the two countries.

In Tel Aviv yesterday the joint supervisory committee on normalization, which is to coordinate the work of all the various specialist committees, completed its session and agreed to exchange today lists of delegates to all the eight specialist committees that are to be set up.

The tourism, telecommunications and land-and-sea transport committees are due to begin their deliberations next week.

This morning, Ambassador Taha Maghdoub, head of the Egyptian supervisory committee, will be given a helicopter tour of central Israel, including Jerusalem. Though General Maghdoub has been intimately involved in every stage of the peace process, ever since the "Kilometre 101" talks after the Yom Kippur War, this is believed to be his first visit to Israel.

At midday he will call on Defence Minister Ezer Weizman, who bears overall responsibility for Israel's normalization efforts.

The Israeli supervisory committee consists of Aluf Avraham Tamir (Weizman's top aide), Tat-Aluf Ephraim Poran of the Prime Minister's Office, Yehudit Carp of the attorney-general's office, and the premier's spokesman, Dan Pattir.

Begin: Foreign Ministry is for Shamir... soon

By SARAH HONIG
Post Political Reporter

Prime Minister Menahem Begin yesterday for the first time confirmed publicly that he intends to make Knesset Speaker Yitzhak Shamir the next foreign minister. Sources close to Begin told The Jerusalem Post last night that the appointment is likely to be made within a week to 10 days.

But Begin, who was speaking at a Foreign Press Association luncheon, indicated that Shamir's move to the Foreign Ministry is not imminent. He said his "good friends of the Liberal Party" had asked him to hold off pending redress of their complaint that they are underrepresented in the cabinet.

At last night's Herut Executive session in Tel Aviv, most speakers urged Begin not to delay the appointment any longer, regardless of coalition considerations. But Begin did not address himself to any of these requests.

It is still not clear how the prime minister plans to compensate the Liberal Party for its underrepresentation in the cabinet and his aides say that it is not at all certain that the party will get another cabinet portfolio.

The Liberals last week managed to postpone the Shamir appointment after a meeting with the prime minister in which they were promised that Shamir will not assume his new office until the party's grievances are somehow redressed. Sources close to Begin say now that the compensation and the appointment need not be simultaneous.

They add that while an additional portfolio may eventually be assigned the Liberals, this will depend on openings around the cabinet table, which are not available at present. For the time being, they hint, the Liberals may be mollified by several deputy ministerships, or by the removal of the Israel Lands Administration and control of the country's water resources from the Agriculture Ministry and their transfer to Yitzhak Modai's Energy Ministry. In addition, the Liberals would be getting the Knesset Speaker's post, to be vacated by Shamir.

Begin vows 'no interference' in U.S. electoral process

Jerusalem Post Staff

PRIME MINISTER Menahem Begin stressed yesterday that the government would not interfere in any way whatever in the American democratic process. He was responding to a newsman's question about Defence Minister Ezer Weizman's repeated public endorsement of President Jimmy Carter for re-election.

"The Government of Israel does not interfere and will not interfere in the democratic process of electing the president of the United States," Begin declared.

Begin observed that Israel had traditionally enjoyed the support of both political parties in the U.S.

The premier declined, however, to take issue with Weizman directly for his statements.

Weizman meanwhile has received a congratulatory telegram from Theodore Mann, chairman of the Conference of Presidents of Major Jewish Organizations in the U.S., on the minister's recent appearance on the American television show, "60 Minutes."

In his cable Mann said that in his 20-minute interview with Mike Wallace, Weizman did more good for Israel's image than had been done in a long time.

Several days ago Mann was rebuked in public by Israel Ambassador Ephraim Evron for his criticism of Weizman's remarks about Kennedy.

UK seeking to include PLO in talks

LONDON (JTA). — A call for Palestinian participation in a Middle East settlement was made last night by Britain's Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington.

In an apparent reappraisal of British policy which observers link to a desire to capitalize on the strong anti-Soviet mood sweeping the Moslem and Arab world following Russia's intervention in Afghanistan, Carrington told the House of Lords that while Israel and Egypt had taken a "major step" in demonstrating their wish for peaceful coexistence, this was "only half the solution."

"A lasting peace must resolve the Palestinian problem, enabling the Palestinians, through their representatives, to participate in the negotiation of a settlement, and in that framework to determine their political future in a language of their own," Carrington said.

Only such a peace could meet Arab aspirations and guarantee Israel's long-term security. "Only if they believe that the world is moving towards such a peace will the Arab countries be fully able and prepared to take account of all the implications for them, and for the rest of us, of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan," he said.

The Conservative, pro-Israel "Daily Telegraph" yesterday reported that Britain is seeking European support for a new Middle East initiative. One part of the British plan proposes an amendment to UN Security Council Resolution 242 that would unequivocally accept "the rights of the Palestinian people." Also projected is a new international conference that would attempt to by-pass the role Russia might play as co-chairman in a reconvened Geneva conference.

Police: 'Peru Connection' cracked

TEL AVIV (Itim). — The chance discovery by a Tel Aviv pharmacist of two undelivered envelopes which held 80 grams of pure, top-quality cocaine uncovered a cocaine-smuggling network linking Israel and Peru, police said yesterday.

Five people have so far been arrested in the "Peru Connection" — an art teacher, two men and two women, most of them art students.

The Israel police have informed Interpol, and information has been passed to Peru to help break that end of the chain.

The pharmacist noticed the two envelopes lying on the ground in a backyard. Seeing that the address they bore was that of a nearby house, he tried, in vain, to find a mail box matching the name on the envelope. It later emerged that the name used was fictitious. Meanwhile, one of the envelopes had opened and the pharmacist noticed it contained a white powder which he found, on examination, was cocaine.

Checking the address, police found that one of the occupants of the house was an immigrant from Peru, an art teacher. When they entered his apartment, they found the four students with him. A search turned up 50 grams of hashish.

The artist has denied all connection with the cocaine and with any earlier deliveries.

But police are convinced that this was not the first cocaine consignment sent to the suspects, three of whom are from Peru. They think earlier envelopes were sent to fictitious names and that the postman may have erred in the case of the latest envelopes, or that they found their way to the courtyard by some other mishap.

Cocaine, often adulterated with some other white powdery substance, sells here for IL8,000 a gram.

40 Egyptian tourists in Jerusalem

Tears of joy after 31 years

By JUDY SIEGEL
Jerusalem Post Reporter

With the dancing of the hora, the reciting of the "Shehehiyanu" blessing, and the singing of "Hava Nagila," 40 Jews and a few of their Moslem spouses from Cairo and Alexandria were welcomed in Jerusalem last night by tearful Israeli relatives.

"I can't believe it," sobbed Isaac de Picciotto, vice-president and treasurer of the Alexandria Jewish community, as he hugged his brothers Ya'acov and Raphael for the first time in 31 years. "God bless Sadat, Begin and Carter."

Blinded by the TV camera lights and confused by the media attention, the relatives huddled in small groups in the lobby of the Ramada Shalom Hotel, trying to catch up in a few moments on the decades of news about family joys and tragedies, births and deaths.

The mostly middle-aged group, accompanied by Ihab Gazarene, manager of the Alexandria branch of Emeco (which, with VIP Travel and Tours of Tel Aviv, organized the six-day tour), arrived at Ben-Gurion Airport in the afternoon. The Egyptian tourists were met by officials of the tourism administration, and presented with a special kit, a kova tembel, maps, and a certificate attesting to their pilgrimage and inscribed with their names.

The Ramada Shalom outfitted hostesses with long white Egyptian-style cotton gowns for the occasion, hung Israeli and Egyptian flags in the reception hall, and presented each guest with a red carnation. What was supposed to be a press conference turned out to be a party and a family reunion. There were a few speeches, including a greeting by Jerusalem Chief Rabbi Shalom Mashash and hotel manager Yehuda Greenbaum. But no questions were asked, since most of the answers could be read from the happy faces.

"I think all the Jews of Egypt would like to come and visit," said Lina Bellily Nakson, secretary of the Alexandria Jewish community. Nakson last visited Eretz Yisrael in 1944 and now views settling here as "a possibility." Unfortunately, an aunt of hers in Beersheba died only a month ago, dashing her hopes of meeting close relatives. Nakson praised Egyptian President Anwar Sadat for signing the peace treaty and for his attitude towards his country's Jews, adding that they were afraid under President Gamal Abdul Nasser before him.

Among the Israelis waiting to greet their relatives was former Black Panther MK Shalom Cohen, whose uncle is Raphel Ishar Bilboul, the leader of the Jewish community.

The group will stay in the Tel Aviv Sheraton and Haifa's Zion Hotel during the rest of their tour, after a few days in the Jerusalem area.

The Egyptian tourists are Farida el-Sayed Salem, Laila el-Sayed Abdel-Salem, Armand Guiduis Tagher, Aida Hassan, Yochel Armand Tagher, Edmee Hazan, Fernand Ishak Bilboul, Victor Fuad Maggar, Grazia Moise Picciotto, Camille Cohen, Youssef David, Mr. Harari, Raphel Ishar Bilboul, Fouad Abdel Kheir, Esther Clement Haddad, Ibrahim Abou Shedid, Elie Nissim Davidoff, Jeanne Menahem Jacoub, Doris Benjamin Khayat, Robert Naim Mugrabi, Badria Vicky Shemtoub, Maurice Haim Ballas, Maria Robas Ballas, Ninette Yousset Hassan, Youkmid Tahrany Negad, Boroda Mirella Nathan, Salomon Nissim Nathan, Isaac Moise de Picciotto, Henrietta Israel Cohen, Victoria Tahrany Negad, Anna Tahrany Negad, Alice Ismaloun, Fortunee Baranes, Gladys Moussa Gabbay, Lina Bellily Nakson, Iris Pollak, Nelly Aghion, Mrs. Gaon, Denise Albert Messica, Ihab Gazarine and his wife, and Benjamin Gaon, travel tour leader from VIP.

Labour court bans wildcat teachers' strikes from today

By BENNY MORRIS
Jerusalem Post Reporter

Dozens of 12th-grade classes around the country were struck yesterday, for the second day. Teachers were acting on their own initiative after their union, the Association of Secondary School Teachers, was earlier this week barred by a labour court from closing all the country's 12th-grade classes.

On Wednesday, the Jerusalem District Labour Court expanded its injunction to cover individual teachers. The order came into force at 3 p.m. yesterday, so that all such wildcat actions will now be in defiance of the courts.

The Jerusalem District Labour Court met again yesterday to continue considering the teachers' claim to wage parity with civil service engineers. If the court accepts their claim, many teachers will receive special duties ("emergency standby") allowances and academic degree increments increasing salaries by 20 per cent.

Some observers predict that the court's ruling, expected at the beginning of next week, will merely endorse the teachers' claim in principle, and recommend implementation only when wage agreements are renegotiated.

The teachers' wage agreement expires on March 31, but it is understood that the government intends maintaining a wage freeze at least until the start of 1981, and that no new wage agreements will be signed in the interim.

boats maintained constant patrols along 30 km. of the south Lebanon coast for the second straight day.

He also said Israeli jets and helicopters made repeated reconnaisance flights over southern areas, stretching from the Palestinian-controlled port of Tyre to the Syrian-held positions 80 km. inland.

U.S. Defence Secretary Harold Brown warned in his annual report to Congress on Wednesday of a possible Syrian-Israeli military confrontation in Southern Lebanon.

Speaking last night to members of the Herut Executive, Begin repeated his statement that Israel plans no aggression against Syria. But, nevertheless, "we must watch Syria's moves very carefully," so as not to encounter "any unpleasant surprises."

Begin went on to say that many terrorist attacks inside Israel had been foiled lately, although many details cannot be made public.

"And yet people argue that the PLO has abandoned the path of terrorism for the course of diplomacy," he added. "This is ...an optical illusion. There have been relatively few terrorist outrages, not because the PLO has changed its character or its aims, but because we have been more successful in foiling these attacks."

Israel envoy raps UN panel

GENEVA (Reuter). — Israel yesterday accused a UN committee on human rights in the administered territories of "grotesque and false charges" and of ignoring Israeli denials in its reports.

Israel Ambassador Yoel Barromi told the UN Human Rights Commission, discussing the latest report, that the special committee had made a "totally unwarranted" extension of its mandate to investigate Israeli practices by also commenting on Israeli policies.

"The special committee since its inception (in 1968) has been solely composed of states having no diplomatic relations with Israel," he said.

Peres meets Finnish president and premier

HELSINKI (UPI). — Labour Party chairman Shimon Peres, in Finland on a three-day visit, yesterday met briefly with President Urho Kekkonen before going on to talks with other government officials.

His half-hour talk with Kekkonen was unscheduled, a Social Democratic Party spokesman said, and the subject of discussion was not disclosed.

Later he met with Prime Minister Mauno Koivisto and other Social Democrats. And last night he was the guest of the Helsinki Jewish community.

Today he is due to meet with Foreign Minister Paavo Valyrynen and Minister of Internal Affairs Johannes Koikkalainen.

Peres arrived in Finland on Wednesday at the invitation of the Social Democratic Party. He attended the Socialist International conference in Vienna earlier this week.

Peres is scheduled to leave Finland tomorrow.

the closure of all shops, offices and public institutions in the Jewish suburb from noon on Sunday in Sloma's memory.

The leaflets, issued by the suburb's yeshiva, said that after afternoon prayers in the Cave of Machpelah, there will be organized tours of "houses and institutions due to return to the Jewish people" — a reference to property owned by Jews in Hebron until the 1929 riots and massacre.

After that, the entire population of Kiryat Arba, plus guests from other Israeli settlements in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, are to assemble at the Avraham Avinu Synagogue for "the formal declaration of the return of the Jewish people to Hebron," the leaflets said.

Students from the yeshiva yesterday completed a system of posts and ropes (eruv) linking the suburb with the Cave of Machpelah to allow residents, in accordance with Halacha, to carry religious articles to the synagogue without violating the Sabbath.

Kiryat Arba sources confirmed yesterday that residents of the suburb have purchased land adjoining Hebron in recent years, and that the military government was "quite aware" of repairs being done on Jewish property in the centre of the Arab town.

Prime Minister Menahem Begin declared last night that a decision on the legal status of Judea and Samaria settlement is in the offing. He told members of the Herut Executive: "There are problems in connection with a few of the settlements. I am not only thinking about the question, but also working hard to solve it. We are about to reach decisions very soon which will resolve the issue."

But earlier the prime minister carefully avoided saying whether he would support the proposal to re-establish the Jewish Quarter in the old town of Hebron.

Pressed repeatedly by newsmen during a Foreign Press Association luncheon, the premier would only affirm that "the government will consider measures to ensure that there is real security for the Jews in Judea and Samaria — and of course that includes Hebron."

Hospital workers strike to protest staff cuts

Jerusalem Post Reporter

Hospital administration workers yesterday staged a one-day warning strike as their directors met with Health Ministry Director-General Prof. Baruch Modan to work out details of the dismissal of 223 of their fellow workers.

The cuts, in government hospitals and health services, are to be matched by similar measures in the Kupat Holim and semi-independent hospitals such as Hadassah and Shaare Zedek. In announcing the cuts, the Health Ministry stressed that the present 3.3 per cent budget slash was about half that proposed by Treasury officials.

The workers, whose strike was also intended as a gesture of solidarity with the country's X-ray technicians, object to the fact that the dismissals will ignore the last-in, first-out principle. The list of those to be dismissed is to be submitted by March 31.

Meanwhile, hospital administrators report that many doctors are already making plans to leave the country. Among them are some 600 medical school graduates now finishing their internships with no jobs in sight. Only those who still have to do their army service are assured of a place for the next few years.

(On the other hand, with an end to the job freeze that preceded the budget cut, some 60 medical students who have finished their final exams will now be taken in as interns in the country's hospitals.)

Speaking for the country's nurses, Moria Galili, head of the Nurses Union, said the cuts are certain to mean the closure of services which will result in higher infant mortality rates, epidemics, and a higher death rate in hospitals. It is impossible to make any more cuts without impairing public health, she said.

She suggested that services be made more efficient, with clinics and medical facilities and equipment used for longer hours. However, she complained, the Health Ministry has not seen fit to discuss the matter with the workers' organizations.

She said she felt that the health minister should have taken a firmer stand in defence of the country's most essential services, and if necessary resigned rather than accept such cuts. Instead, she said, he went abroad while the cuts were being discussed with the Treasury.

JOSHUA BRILLIANT adds:

All X-ray services were paralysed by yesterday's strike.

The 700 X-ray technicians could not join the strike because they have been served back-to-work orders. But the refusal of the clerks and other workers to open files and to do the other auxiliary work paralysed the X-ray facilities.

The strikers did, however, handle surgery and cancer patients, Haim Baranes, acting chairman of the Kupat Holim workers, said.

Labour Ministry to sack hundreds

Jerusalem Post Reporter

The Labour and Social Affairs Ministry in the coming months will fire hundreds of clerks, vocational training workers, employment service officials and youth councillors, as a result of the 6 per cent budget cut approved recently for all government ministries, a ministry spokesman said yesterday.

The ministry will also reduce by 900 the places for children of working mothers in day care centres, and by 800 the number of places for underprivileged children in boarding schools.

Other cuts will include the reduction of social work retraining courses for academics and the reduction by 600 of jobs for the aged in the Hamneshakem service.

With this, the ministry said that old-age, disability and welfare allowances will not be cut, and services for helping alcoholics, juvenile delinquents and ex-convicts will not be reduced.

Gafny warns of stagflation, favours certain subsidies

By YITZHAK OKED
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Bank of Israel Governor Arnon Gafny yesterday warned of the possibilities of the economy running into "stagflation." Stagflation, he explained, is when inflation continues despite signs of stagnation in the economy, such as unemployment and a decrease in productivity.

Speaking before the Association of Insurance Companies at the Dan Hotel, Gafny came out in support of subsidies to public transport. He noted that by subsidizing the riding public, the government encourages the use of public transportation and cuts down on the wasteful use of private cars.

But Gafny backed the recent cancellation of subsidies in the dairy branch and the credit freeze. However, he believed that the government had to take more steps to bring down the rate of inflation.

Such steps include reducing the budget.

Gafny said that banks will be able to lower the nominal credit only after inflation starts to slow.

He also urged that labour contracts not be renegotiated during the coming year. But he emphasized that a system should be found to compensate workers fully for the rise in the cost-of-living.

Under the present C-o-L allowance system, he said, the worker finds his salary eroded every month; this must be corrected before April 1.

Gafny also hoped that the government would meet its goal of increasing tax revenues by 5 per cent by cracking down on tax dodgers.

Fewer workers from areas now employed in Israel

By SHLOMO MAOZ
Post Economic Reporter

The current economic slowdown in Israel resulted in a 12 per cent drop in the number of Arab workers from the administered areas employed in Israel during January.

A breakdown of the 47,040 workers registered in the labour exchanges for January shows: in construction, 13,345 (as compared with 14,998 in December); in industry, 17,165 (20,161); in agriculture 7,831 (9,744); and in services, 7,600 (9,392).

Observers note that West Bank and Gaza workers in Israel serve as a kind of "safety-valve" which moderates sharp fluctuations in the demand for labour. When jobs are plenty and wages high, more workers from the areas come to work in Israel, at the expense of construction work in their villages or "export" of their services to Arab countries. When jobs are scarcer, these workers do not necessarily join the ranks of the unemployed — they either go back to work in their villages or (particularly professionals and skilled workers) go to Arab countries.

Concerning unemployment in Israel, the chairman of the Shell faction in the Histadrut, Ron Cohen, has called for an urgent meeting of the Histadrut Executive to discuss the problem.

He said the Executive was failing to keep abreast of looming economic difficulties and noted that 1,700 firms throughout the country had already announced their intention of firing workers.

The Central Bureau of Statistics, meanwhile, has published figures showing that from January through September 1979 real wages went up by 10.2 per cent as compared with the corresponding period in 1978. The steepest wage rise — 16.6 per cent — was recorded in public services.

Israel vs. Swiss in Davis Cup tonight

By JACK LEON
Post Sports Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Local tennis star Shlomo Glickstein, 22, will be first on court this evening in the third-round European zone indoor Davis Cup match between Israel and Switzerland at Winterthur, near Zurich.

The draw, made yesterday by referee Mike Gibson of England — the former longtime Wimbledon referee — pits Glickstein against Swiss No. 2 Roland Stadler, 20. The Israel champion should win if he plays to form, to put his team on the road to victory. The match starts at 6 p.m. Israel time on the synthetic rubber court.

In the opening day's second singles, Israel's No. 2 racquet Steve Krulevitz, 28, starts as the outsider against the highly rated Swiss champion Heinz Gunthardt, 22. Krulevitz is expected to give Gunthardt a hard fight.

Israel's non-playing captain Joseph Stabholz and coach Ron Steele are likely to bring in new cap David Schneider, 24, as Glickstein's partner for tomorrow's doubles, beginning at 4 p.m. Israel time. The reverse singles on Sunday wind up the match. Israel's team manager is Avram Feiger.

Aussie XV going for fifth straight win

Post Sports Reporter

TEL AVIV. — The New South Wales Maccabi Rugby Union club of Sydney will be going for their fifth straight win here tomorrow, when they take on Israel's National XV at the Tel Aviv University sports stadium. Kick-off time is 3 p.m.

Under the captaincy of their player-coach Richard Bowman, the Australian "Maccaroos" have amassed a grand total of 81 points in winning their four tour matches to date, while conceding only six points through two penalties.

Israel's line-up tomorrow is Maizel, Meyer, Feldman, Green, Kanpol, Myers, Hammar (captain), Reed, Drori, Nimrod Cohen, Tobias, Bleichman, Fuchs, Colin Clerk and Johnstone, with Dave Kaplan as team manager and Alan Politinsky as coach. Selectors were Basil Gold, Bernie Myers and Kalley Saacks.

As a curtain-raiser to the "test," there will be a youth match between Ra'anana and Kiryat Bialik at 1:30.

Foreign airlines 'snatching up' Israeli pilots

By MICHAL YUDELMAN
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — Foreign airlines are "snatching up" Israeli pilots, now that they have openly begun to look for work outside El Al, a source in the Israel Pilots Union told The Jerusalem Post yesterday.

"Hundreds of pilots are out of work and have given up hope of finding a job in El Al and making Israel their home. They'll take any job offered them by a foreign airline," the source said.

The source told The Post of four Israeli pilots who were hired by a large European airline this week, of a recent El Al pilots' course graduate who was hired in London, and of others.

Most of the pilots had been waiting for a chance to be hired by El Al, working part-time for other companies or doing odd jobs until El Al could hire them. But now that the firing of 66 pilots has been announced, the unemployed pilots have decided not to wait any longer.

Meanwhile, the Pilots Union is preparing an all-out battle against El Al's intention to fire 66 of its members as part of the airline's retrenchment programme.

El Al's management intends to present each of the airline's works committees with the names of the workers to be dismissed after next Friday. "We'll examine the lists. But they'd better think it over, because we intend to fight it all the way," an official source in the Pilots Union told The Post.

'PLO backer' who received kidney is 13-year-old girl

By HAIM SHAPIRO
Jerusalem Post Reporter

Hadassah University Hospital in Jerusalem yesterday denied that a PLO supporter was the recipient of a kidney from the body of Jesper Jehoshua Sloma, the yeshiva student-soldier killed in Hebron eight days ago.

The hospital spokesman simply said the story, first aired by Agudat Yisrael MK Menahem Porush, was untrue. She said that medical confidentiality prevented her from revealing details about the recipient of the kidney.

But in a television interview on Wednesday night, Prof. Arye Durst, head of the surgery department at Hadassah in Ein Kerem, said that one kidney had been given to a patient from Jerusalem's Shaare Zedek Medical Centre, the other to a patient from Soroka Medical Centre in Beersheba.

A reliable source in the Shaare Zedek dialysis unit yesterday told The Post that, on Thursday night, the unit received word to be on standby as a kidney might be available. The patient chosen for the transplant was a 13-year-old Arab girl from a refugee camp near Nablus, who had been undergoing dialysis twice a week for some time.

The source said the girl has been consistently vocal and fiery in her criticism of Jews and Israel and her admiration for the PLO. She wore a medallion with a PLO symbol, the source added, saying that her behaviour was in contrast to that of most Arab patients, who were either outwardly thankful for the care they received or simply quiet about their views.

Jesper Jehoshua Sloma (Indor, IPPA)

A spokesman for Shaare Zedek said that all children undergoing dialysis are registered for kidney transplants. The patient in question was registered at the transplant centre at Hadassah. The staff at Shaare Zedek had no way of knowing the identity of any donor to patients sent for transplants, the spokesman added.

Masked bandits take the whole kitty

REVAYA (Itim). — Three masked bandits broke into an apartment in Moshav Revaya before dawn yesterday and collected some IL40,000 from nine card players, who had been gambling since nine o'clock the previous evening.

The armed robbers lined the players up against the wall, emptied their pockets and cleared cash from the table. They also took the keys to a Peuget pickup truck one of the victims was using from his factory, and drove off in it.

At first the card players were afraid to report the robbery; but when the truck driver's boss came for the vehicle at 7 a.m., he had to tell the story.

Five suspects were arrested later in the day.

Gush 'refugees' allowed to remain in Nablus hotel

By JOSHUA BRILLIANT
Jerusalem Post Reporter

The military government yesterday permitted two would-be settlers from Gush Emunim to remain in the Falastin Hotel in downtown Nablus.

The two, Baruch Marzer and Yitzhak Yanai, checked in on Wednesday. They described themselves as "refugees from Elon Moreh," the Gush Emunim settlement southeast of Nablus which was evacuated on Sunday. Marzer and Yanai refused to join the rest of the Elon Moreh group at Jabal Kabir. They explained they were the "vanguard" for other people who would move into the Falastin Hotel unless they were allowed back to Elon Moreh.

Police questioned the two men yesterday morning and later the military government summoned them to appear before a senior officer. But they were allowed to return to the hotel. "As far as we're concerned they can hire the entire hotel," a military government spokesman told The Jerusalem Post.

The hotel's owner, who asked not to be named, said the two were good customers who were paying by the night. But he expected them to stay for only two or three days. When told of their plans, he said: "We deplore that behaviour. But we can't refuse them because we're under military government. If they behave badly, we'll behave badly too."

Any further action would have to be decided on by the Nablus leadership, he said.

LAST CHANCE. — Next week will be the last week of an amnesty programme for IDF equipment held in citizens' homes without permission. It can now be returned without penalty and no questions asked; but beginning February 17, home searches will be made and offenders will be tried.

Shamir to launch Tehiya in U.S.

Post Political Correspondent

TEL AVIV. — Tehiya MK Moshe Shamir is leaving for the U.S. on a coast-to-coast lecture tour to "sound the alarm among American Jews over the peace hoax."

In an interview to appear in Sunday's Jerusalem Post, Shamir said that he and fellow party leaders will shortly launch an American branch of Tehiya. A Canadian organization already exists in Montreal.

The right-wing MK is convinced that the American mood is now more receptive to his message of opposition to the concessions Israel has made to Egypt under the peace treaty, after "the awakening from the reveries of detente."

BGU institute renamed

SDE BOKER. — Ben-Gurion University's Institute for Desert Research will be renamed the Jacob Blaustein Institute, Yosef Tekoah, the university's president, announced yesterday.

Blaustein, who died 10 years ago, was co-founder and president of the American Oil Company and president of the American Jewish Committee from 1949 to 1954. The close personal relationship he formed with Israel's prime minister, David Ben-Gurion, in this period led to the "Ben-Gurion-Blaustein agreement," which defined the interdependence of Israel and American Jewry.

A grant which has been made to the desert research institute by the Blaustein Foundation was described by Tekoah yesterday as "a life-giving infusion."

Afghan 'feelers' to the West may have caused Soviet invasion

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP). — Secret signals to the West from the late President Hafizullah Amin that he was prepared, under certain conditions, to expel the thousands of Soviet advisers in Afghanistan may have triggered the Soviet military intervention and brought about his own downfall and death.

Details are gradually emerging among Western and non-aligned diplomats of the events leading up to the December 27 coup that brought pro-Soviet President Babrak Karmal to power with the help of the Red Army.

The sequence of events, as pieced together by these sources, begins shortly after leftist thugs kidnapped and murdered American Ambassador Adolph Dubbs in Kabul last February.

Washington accused the Soviet-dominated regime of then President Nur Mohammed Taraki of not doing enough to prevent the killing.

Amin, then Taraki's prime minister, discreetly signalled his anti-Soviet feelings with a personal message to the U.S. expressing regret at Dubbs' death.

On September 14, Amin replaced Taraki in a palace coup and Taraki was killed. Diplomats described Amin as a ruthless Marxist but also an opportunist willing to change sides if the price was high enough.

Estimates of political opponents killed during his 103-day regime range from 8,000 to 12,000 persons.

There was no indication of what price Amin was asking. His renewed overtures, some made through the Afghan delegation at the UN, were ignored, possibly because of his blatant contempt for human rights in Afghanistan.

Since no Afghan secret can be kept for long, the Russians quickly learned of Amin's moves, the sources said.

From that day, Amin's fate was sealed. By October, American intelligence reports noted large Soviet troop concentrations north of the Amu Darya River that marks the Soviet-Afghan border.

Senior diplomats who knew Amin said by mid-November he was acting like a man at bay. In a last desperate attempt to turn events, he distributed arms to a civilian militia loyal only to him, ordered a blackout of Kabul and warned Afghans against obeying the orders of uniformed foreigners.

The only uniformed foreigners soon to sweep across the country were 85,000 men of the Red Army.

Since Amin's death, Communist propaganda has continuously accused him of conspiring with the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency. Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev said he planned to turn Afghanistan into "an imperialist military bridgehead on our southern border."

On December 24, an armoured airborne division landed at Kabul airport. There was no opposition from the Soviet-trained Afghan army. Amin made no public statement. On December 26, still the recognized president of Afghanistan, he received visiting Soviet Communications Minister Nikolai Talisin. A photograph of the two men in Amin's office was published in the government daily "Kabul Times" on December 27.

At 7 p.m. on that day, the Soviet radio station in Tashkent broadcast a statement by Karmal assuming full powers and announcing that Amin would be tried for atrocities.

By midnight on December 27, Amin was almost certainly dead. Karmal's statement was finally broadcast by Radio Kabul at 1 a.m.

Karmal was briefly a minister under Taraki but left the country in 1978 and was sent as ambassador to Czechoslovakia, the scene of Soviet intervention nearly a decade earlier.

The diplomats said Karmal landed at Kabul airport in a Soviet plane after dark on December 27. By that time, the Red Army had firmly restored "socialist legality" in Afghanistan.

Iran's minorities can elect own delegates to parliament

TEHERAN (Reuter). — Jews, Zoroastrians and Christians will elect their own representatives to Iran's Islamic Assembly (parliament) in next month's elections, under regulations published yesterday.

The Jewish and Zoroastrian communities, each numbering about 80,000, will elect one deputy each; and three of the 270 assembly seats will be reserved for Iranian and Armenian Christians. Zoroastrianism is the ancient pre-Islamic religion of Iran.

The regulations did not specify how members of the religious minorities would vote.

All candidates must believe in the Islamic republican system and must show their faith in Iran's Islamic constitution, the regulations said. Parliamentary hopefuls must be aged between 25 and 75, literate and recommended by at least 20 people in the area they seek to represent.

The only people barred from seeking election will be former members of the shah's parliament, former high officials of his regime and members of his hated political police, Savak.

The first round of the elections will be held on March 7 with a second ballot two weeks later in areas where no candidate wins an absolute majority in the first poll.

Iranian president denounces students

TEHERAN. — Iranian Information Minister Nasser Minachi left jail yesterday, and the Moslem students whose disclosure of captured U.S. documents put him behind bars were branded by President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr as "lawless and contrary to Islam."

Minachi was ordered freed by a unanimous vote of the ruling Revolutionary Council on Wednesday night, within 24 hours of his arrest by revolutionary guards.

S. Africa tests end of black curfew

CAPE TOWN (Reuter). — Two South African cities are to experiment with dropping the 72-hour curfew imposed on visiting blacks, one of this country's most hated apartheid laws.

Dr. Piet Koornhof, minister of cooperation and development (black affairs), said in Parliament this week that the curfew, whereby blacks need a permit to stay more than 72 hours in an urban area where they do not live, would be dropped in Pretoria and Bloemfontein as an experiment. The curfew is an integral part of so-called influx control laws which restrict the movements of blacks.

Koornhof said that the step was taken "with a view to building up good race relations and removing hurtful discrimination as far as practically possible." A department committee would also be set up to review and revise all laws affecting blacks in urban areas, he said.

Meanwhile, Transkei, the black homeland declared self-governing by Pretoria in 1976, yesterday announced it was re-establishing ties with South Africa, the only country which recognizes its independence. Transkei severed diplomatic relations in April 1978 after South Africa decided to incorporate a strip of land known as East Griqualand into Natal province and not the Transkei.

Transkei Prime Minister Chief George Matanzima said the restoration of ties, including a non-aggression pact, followed the publication of a bill in the current session of the South African Parliament transferring some other areas of land adjacent to the Transkei to the homeland. Negotiations on further claims are still going on, Matanzima said.

Magazine chases UK bugs and spooks out of closet

LONDON (Reuter). — A left-wing magazine yesterday named the heads of Britain's secret services, whose identities are normally hidden, and described their electronic surveillance and bugging operations.

The "New Statesman" magazine, in the latest instalment of revelations which have already caused a storm in Parliament, said the security and intelligence services had exclusive use of eight large office blocks in London.

It printed the addresses of the London offices and estimated that they employed 5,400 people.

The "New Statesman" said the head of Britain's counter-espionage security service, known as MI5, was Sir Howard Trayton Smith, a former ambassador to Moscow. The secret intelligence service, MI6, was headed by Sir Arthur ("Dickie") Franks, it said.

The magazine said that, although planting a bug on target premises required breaking and entering — or at least gaining entry by deception — no legal warrants were needed.

It quoted an unnamed intelligence official as giving this description of bugging and telephone tapping targets: "Embassies, all of them...including the Americans...trade union leaders and offices all the time...journalists, not very many...shipping companies, they are a very valuable source of information...a few MPs."

Every surveillance resource was employed to monitor the conversations and discussions of guerrilla leaders Joshua Nkomo and Robert Mugabe during the Rhodesian constitutional conference in London last autumn, the "New Statesman" said.

This surveillance operation, according to a senior intelligence source, was authorized directly by Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington, the "New Statesman" said.

The secret services and the police shared a joint electronic surveillance and bugging centre at a quiet house in Camberwell, South London, it reported.

Last week the "New Statesman" caused a storm in Parliament when it published details of a sophisticated government phone-tapping centre in central London.

Claims he was investigating

Congressman admits taking FBI's 'Arab scam' money

WASHINGTON (UPI). — Rep. Richard Kelly, the only Republican implicated in the "Arab scam" bribery scandal, admitted publicly on Wednesday he took $25,000 from FBI undercover agents. But he claimed he was just conducting his own investigation.

Kelly, 55, told NBC news he got the money from a man in the FBI undercover house in Washington, stuffed it in his clothes and later locked it in the glove compartment of his car. He said he spent a little of the money before turning the rest over to the FBI, but claimed the whole episode was just his own investigation of what he thought were shady characters.

Shortly before Kelly made his statements, the House of Representatives and Senate Ethics Committees both decided to begin their own investigations of the scandal, despite Justice Department warnings that could jeopardize criminal prosecutions.

Kelly, a former Circuit Court judge from Florida, is the first of eight members of Congress implicated in the case to admit he took any money from FBI agents who posed as rich Arabs seeking congressional favours. He said he thought when the money was offered he had a "unique opportunity" to investigate wrongdoing.

He said he did not turn the money over to the FBI immediately because "I was not going to blow the cover on my case." There are reports the FBI has a videotape of Kelly stuffing the money into his pockets.

Meanwhile, at the White House, press secretary Jody Powell said Attorney-General Benjamin Civiletti had a "general conversation" with President Jimmy Carter about the case on Tuesday, but "the president had no reason to enquire into the situation relating to particular actions or individuals. It would not be appropriate."

Civiletti led a Justice Department fight against House and Senate misconduct probes, telling the House panel in a letter it should wait until the government completes its criminal case against members of Congress suspected of taking bribes from the undercover FBI agents who posed as rich Arabs.

Big Soviet arms deal to Zambia confirmed

LUSAKA (UPI). — Zambia has concluded a major arms deal with the Soviet Union worth more than $100 million in a bid to strengthen the African nation's defences, a government spokesman confirmed yesterday.

The spokesman confirmed weekend reports that the military package included 16 Mig-21 combat aircraft and that Zambian air force personnel were already undergoing training in the Soviet Union ahead of delivery of the new fighter squadron towards April.

Milanese terrorists hit 'informer'

MILAN (AP). — A terrorist suspect was ambushed and shot to death by a guerrilla commando of four in Milan yesterday, police reported. He was the third victim in three days. There have been 10 terrorist murders so far this year.

Shortly after the attack, "Prima Linea" (front line), a left-wing urban guerrilla gang, claimed responsibility for the assassination.

An anonymous caller told a Milan newspaper the man was shot because he had become an informer.

Willian Vaccher, 26, was riddled with at least 10 pistol bullets, police said.

Terrorists, including a woman, fired at Vaccher as he approached his car outside his home to drive to work, police said.

According to eyewitnesses, Vaccher tried to flee but three gunmen opened fire, leaving him no escape.

The woman fired a coup de grâce before fleeing in a waiting car, later found abandoned in a nearby street, authorities said.

A woman was also reported as being among the terrorists who assassinated three policemen and an executive of a Swiss-owned chemical group in the Milan area this year.

Vaccher, who had been investigated by police for the 1979 murder of Milan magistrate Emilio Alessandrini, was said by police to be a suspected member of Front Line which has a long history of terrorist attacks on industrial executives and policemen. The group has close links with the Red Brigade, Italy's most feared urban guerrilla group, which kidnapped and killed former premier Aldo Moro in 1978 and has claimed six murders this year.

Front Line has claimed responsibility for the three latest assassination — an industrial executive in Monza on Tuesday, a policeman in Rome on Wednesday, and Vaccher, yesterday.

Vaccher's murder increased tension in this Italian industrial capital, still shocked by a self-styled guerrilla's raid on the Milan offices of a U.S. subsidiary, which ended with the killing of two hostages and the suicide of the gunman on Wednesday night.

'Hunger marchers' hand over supplies

ARYANAPRATHET, Thailand (Reuter). — A group of international "hunger marchers" yesterday handed over food and medicine to the Thai Red Cross after they were refused permission to enter Kampuchea and distribute the supplies among starving refugees.

American folk singer Joan Baez sang "Oh Freedom," a song of the U.S. civil rights movement, as the supplies were handed over to Red Cross officials in a ceremony at this eastern frontier town.

Baez was among 150 politicians, doctors, charity workers and celebrities from Europe and the U.S. who marched to the border on Wednesday.

They were not allowed to cross the border despite their appeals to Kampuchean frontier guards.

Only Baez, Soviet dissident Alexander Ginsburg and some French doctors were present at yesterday's ceremony. The rest of the hunger marchers, including Norwegian actress Liv Ullman, had already returned to Bangkok.

4 int'l drug ring leaders convicted

BIRMINGHAM, England (AP). — Four top men in a major smuggling syndicate that funnelled drugs with a street value of £20m. from Lebanon into the U.S., Canada and Western Europe were convicted here on Wednesday.

The four convicted in Birmingham will be sentenced at a later date, along with four other gang members, all British, who were earlier found guilty by a Birmingham court.

Police sources said the gang's main source of dope was a heavily guarded farm at Baalbek, the heart of Lebanon's drug trade. "Runners" were escorted to the farm by an officer in the Syrian army's tank regiment stationed in Lebanon with the Arab peacekeeping force, the court was told. He was not identified.

Negotiations resume in UK steel strike

LONDON (AP). — Labour union leaders and steel industry bosses are scheduled to resume pay negotiations today in a bid to end Britain's 36-day-old steel strike which has halted steel manufacturing and importing.

William Sirs, general secretary of the Iron and Steel Trades Confederation (ISTC), predicted the strike could be over by Sunday. It is the first time the state-owned British Steel Corp. (BSC) and the 60-member negotiating team from the ISTC and the Blast Furnacemen's Union have met since December 28, five days before the strike started.

Sirs said a new offer for the 110,000 striking BSC workers would be financed with £450m. (IL3bn.) in government subsidies originally earmarked for capital investment.

Sabotage seen in sinking of whaler

LISBON. — The Cypriot-registered ship Sierra, alleged by conservationists to be a pirate whaler, sank in Lisbon harbour after an explosion on board yesterday, maritime police said.

Eight men left the vessel before it sank, and no one was hurt, police added.

A wildlife conservation activist, who asked to remain unidentified, claimed he was "absolutely certain" the blast that sank the Sierra "was not an accident."

"I can give you a 100 per cent guarantee that the explosion was deliberate," he said.

Lisbon port authorities, who said they had no conclusive proof of sabotage, added, "It looks very strange — like the explosion might have been caused by a magnetic or plastic charge."

The Sierra was rammed and damaged off northern Portugal last July by Canadian conservationist Paul Watson, who said he had done it deliberately to "stop it killing any more whales." Watson said the Sierra had "killed everything that moved for 10 years."

Watson, 29, said he had scuttled his conservation ship Sea Shepherd after it had been impounded for ramming the Sierra. He said this had been to stop it falling "into the hands of the enemy." (Reuter, UPI)

ERITREA. — Guerrillas fighting for Eritrean secession from Ethiopia yesterday claimed the capture of a government aircraft during an attack on the town of Agordat. An Ethiopian government spokesman denied the claim as "mere fabrication."

Abba Eban at 65

PUBLIC FACES / Mark Segal

Eliyahu Ben-Elissar | Abba Eban | Eliahu Lankin

WEST GERMAN Chancellor Helmut Schmidt did not forget to include a jab at the Israel-Egypt peace treaty when he expressed the hope that Abba Eban might help bring about a comprehensive peace with all Middle East countries, in his greetings cable on Eban's 65th birthday.

The Ebans gave the nicest of the rash of farewell parties to outgoing British Ambassador Sir John Mason on Wednesday at their Herzliya home. The envoy takes with him a goblet bearing the twin flags of Britain and Israel presented by the recent Conservative Friends of Israel delegation, which gave the same to Herut central committee chairman Avraham Schechterman, during a party at his home.

When Eban showed a foreign diplomat around his library in his Herzliya home recently, the guest remarked that he had no fiction, whereupon Eban quipped: "Oh yes I do, I have Rabin's memoirs."

During his recent stay in England, he went up to Cambridge to visit his old college and to speak at the university Union. "It was here," he told his audience, "that I first learned habits of parliamentary courtesy and restraint, which have been a terrible handicap in my political career ever since."

LIFE AT THE TOP seems nowadays to be full of snares. The brutal tone of Agriculture Minister Ariel Sharon's letter to Premier Menahem Begin, using the language of a general to a non-commissioned officer ("You, sir, have to get down to it") is seen as a well-contrived trap. He is said to be intent on goading Begin to breaking-point, hoping that the premier will overcome his reluctance to dissolve the cabinet, and turn him into a martyr in the cause of Jewish settlement.

Sharon is using one of his old army tricks, having got wind of the fact that the Likud has not included him in their 1981 election plans and that Tehiya, full of such prima donnas as Geula Cohen and Moshe Shamir, don't want him. Some pundits even expect him to go it alone with some Gush Emunim people.

But Begin, the arch-politician, is intent on springing Sharon's trap and laying his own snare. An intimation of his tactics was given by close aide Yehiel Kadishai when asking the Knesset State Control Committee this week for another 20 days' stay of the deadline forcing Sharon to choose between his ranch and his cabinet seat.

DEFENCE MINISTER Ezer Weizman may have put paid to the economic leadership pretensions of his old adversary, Finance Minister Yigael Hurvitz by his victory in the budget skirmish, but his penchant for putting his foot in it, especially over the U.S. elections, has added momentum to his current loss of height. Another of his utterances to a visiting American VIP has bounced back across the Atlantic right to the Prime Minister's Office. Weizman was quoted as having said: "When we reach that bridge we will surely double-cross it...."

IN THE WEEK that Aluf Arye Levi, former IDF quartermaster general, in his capacity as head of the Defence Ministry's purchasing mission in America, authorized receipt of the first F-16 from General Dynamics, rumours began seeping through to the public of infighting over which of the three giant U.S. aeronautic corporations would get the okay to produce the IAF's next generation of planes. No small matter, involving millions of U.S. military aid money, apart from the prestige of supplying one of the best air forces in the world.

Weizman has problems because so many of his pals are involved. McDonnell Douglas (Skyhawk, Phantom and F-15), whose representative in Israel is a former U.S. Air Force colonel, George Laven, is the exception.

General Dynamics chose Weizman's old firm, Ellul, to represent it here, and that agency is run by the minister's good friend, David Kollin, his former spokesman at the Transport Ministry and at the talks in Egypt; and David Rubin, son of the late painter Reuven Rubin, who acquired Weizman's shares when he became Defence Minister in 1977. Their latest addition is Tat-Aluf (res.) Aharon Shavit popularly known as Yalo, who until recently was Israel air attaché in Washington, surely a first-class acquisition as far as contacts with the Pentagon are concerned. Ellul already oversees the spending of $200m. in Israel by the U.S. company as part of the F-16 deal.

NORTHROP has lately acquired the services of Weizman's old IAF pal and successor as O.C., Aluf (res.) Mordechai Hod as its agent here, and as a consultant for its worldwide operations. On leaving El Al's general-directorship last year Hod jointed M.T.I., an agency representing foreign suppliers to the IDF, owned by Zvi Borowitz, whose brother, David, is one of Kanaf's owners and was Hod's partner in the CAL air freight line — and from this month also the owner of Arkia.

I now learn that in 1975, when Hod stopped working as aide to former Defence Minister Shimon Peres on the development of weapons systems, he opened an industrial management consultancy in a room in the El Al building's third-floor offices owned by Eliezer Zurabin, boss of Dahaf advertising. The latter is not only a close pal of both former pilots but was an integral member of Weizman's 1977 Likud election campaign staff along with Kollitz.

He lately poached pollster Mina Zemach from the Modi'in Ezrachi applied research centre, and this gained attention last week after "Monitin" magazine printed a Dahaf poll giving Weizman the advantage over Begin in the Likud and Yigal Allon over Shimon Peres in Labour. Interestingly, "Monitin" manager is Haim Bar-On, who was bureau chief to Allon when the latter was foreign minister and currently is chief trouble-shooter in Allon's drive to wrest the Labour leadership from Peres.

The poll gave a team comprising Allon-Yitzhak Rabin-Ya'acov Levinson the edge over another trio consisting of Peres-Haim Bar-Lev-Moshe Sanbar. The Peres people immediately labelled it part of Allon's "dirty tricks department," arguing that a loaded question got answers made-to-order. Yet there are those who discern a clever move in the juxtaposition of names, if one knows of the long-standing antagonism between the Bank Hapoalim chairman and the former governor of the Bank of Israel.

Last week, Allon strove to allay fears inside Ihud Hakvutzot Vehakibbutzim that his campaign might adversely affect the merger with his Kibbutz Hameuhad. "Do I have to move to Zahala or Neve Avivim (where Peres lives) to be an acceptable candidate?" he asked. Shimon Helman of Afikim wished to know: "Are we to become Yigal's legionnaires?"

INDUSTRIALISTS believe in continuity in government policy after hearing how former Labour economic ministers like the late Pinhas Sapir, the late Yehoshua Rabinowitz and Haim Bar-Lev transformed a prime piece of real estate in North Tel Aviv into one with development town status to accommodate Shaul Eisenberg's construction of Asia House. They now want the same treatment for Textile House near Tel Aviv's Laromme Hotel. Industry, Trade and Tourism Minister Gideon Patt feels existing buildings could do the job, especially as there is a freeze on school and hospital construction, and he doesn't see why he should let them have another IL83m. on easy terms.

TEL AVIV Deputy Mayor and Israel Electric Corporation chairman David Shifman termed last week's one-day protest strike of the "Big Dozen" works committees against Finance Minister Hurvitz's economic policies a "political strike."

Unlike previous occasions, Histadrut reaction was muted, perhaps because they agreed on the quiet that it might have been a proxy fight between Hurvitz and supporters of Housing Minister David Levy like El Al ground staff committee chairman Eitan Rosenman and Dead Sea Works staff committee head David Canfo, both good Herut men.

THE TOP jobs at the Company for the Reconstruction of the Jewish Quarter in Jerusalem's Old City have been vacant for six months. The former director, Aluf (res.) Yosef Geva walked out and Jerusalem lawyer Eliahu Lankin, a veteran Herut member, resigned from the company board because the minister ignored a request to rectify company mismanagement pointed to by the State Controller. Housing Minister David Levy tried to install Jerusalem Herut councillor Shlomo Halevi as chairman, but the attorney-general scotched that on grounds of conflict of interest. Levy has now chosen another Herut man, Nissim Abuloff, for the job. The veteran minister's driver, Israel Weizman, has now been replaced by a member of the Levy clan from Beit She'an.

Ambassador-designate to Egypt Eliyahu Ben-Elissar is also obliged to weather a round of good-byes, launched in Herzliya by veteran Revisionist Lajos ("Mr. Tennis") Gottesman.

All those well-wishers who sent presents and flowers to outgoing British Council representative Peggy Swinley will be pleased to learn she is staying with us for some more months until her successor recovers from an illness. She has certainly helped enrich Israeli cultural life, the latest evidence being the British Council's co-sponsorship, with the Jerusalem Theatre, of the one-man performance here later this month by the great Shakespearian actor Ian McKellen. Arrangements were finalized during a recent visit to London of theatre artistic director Nira Avnieli.

One reason for the troubles besetting our theatres is the complete lack of interest in them under the present regime. It was thus typical that Education and Culture Minister Zevulun Hammer should have been absent from the funeral of the first lady of the Hebrew stage, the late Hannah Rovina. No other minister, for that matter, attended. On the other hand, President Yitshak Navon, a fervent theatre buff, was present, as were former Premier Yitzhak Rabin and Knesset education committee chairman Ora Namir.

THE PRESENCE here of Harvard University international law expert Prof. Louis B. Sohn to lecture on autonomy schemes at a Tel Aviv University symposium gave his former students an opportunity to get together at the home of Liberal Party economic forum head Dr. Haim Teichman (Class '35), which included Prof. Daniel Shimshoni, who heads "Project Renewal," TAU's Prof. Danny Friedman and leading lawyers Amihud Ben-Porat and Danny Jacobson.

The Knesset is waiting with bated breath for Energy Minister Yitshak Moda'i, erstwhile candidate for the Finance and Foreign ministries, to reply to the question of Danny Rosolio (Labour) concerning the oil exploration concession his ministry had awarded to one of his friends, which reportedly was subsequently sold to non-Israelis.

Ya'acov Agmon has the gift for always landing on his feet. After being sacked from TV by Broadcasting Authority chief Tommy Lapid, he has started producing plays once more under the Histadrut aegis at Beit Leissin. It will be recalled that outgoing Arts and Culture Council head Leah Porath came under fire in 1976 for paying him IL250,000 in compensation for goodwill when sutting down his old "Bimot" productions company.

His first production, starring wife Gila Almagor, is an old Nissim Aloni flop, "Butterflies are Free." This arrangement has not been without controversy: Histadrut treasurer Natan Almoslino fought a rearguard battle against what he considered to be an extravagance during a time of austerity.

Agmon has friends on both sides of the party spectrum, including Ariel and Lily Sharon on the extreme right. Agmon and his wife are frequent weekend guests at the Sharon mansion.

BEDUIN MK Sheikh Hamed Abu-Rabia is to be summoned before a Beduin court for failing to honour a rotation agreement between the three top candidates of the Labour-affiliated United Arab List. The Beduin sheikh held that the procrastination of No. 1 candidate Seif e-Din el-Zoubi had given him (as No. 2) little time to serve his constituents. The No. 3 Druse leader does not agree.

Young envoys

By DAVID LANDAU

THE THREE 17-year-olds in the picture, Danny Goldberg (left), Dan Harkavi, and Yonina Weinreb, are all children of professors at the Hebrew University — and all were a bit embarrassed about that fact during an interview this week. Their academic parentage, they insisted, in not typical of the group of 75 eleventh- and twelfth-graders selected from schools all over the country to represent Israel in a seven-week hasbara (information) effort in the U.S.

"There is a solid representation of kibbutzniks and moshavniks in the group, the three young Jerusalemites told me, and a number of kids from development towns.

The main criteria in an elaborate selection procedure seem to have been reasonable fluency in English, an interest in public affairs, involvement in social or cultural activities (youth movements, scouts etc.) and a clean-cut boy/girl next door appearance.

"There's not a single freak in the group," said Yonina, who attends the Pelech girls religious high school. The Post had asked — for the sake of the picture — for a pretty girl and a boy with long hair. Yonina materialized, but the Foreign Ministry, which organizes such a group each year, could not produce a single unkempt male.

Not one of the entire group of 75 smokes, according to Yonina.

Also weeded out, by foreign and education ministry interviews, were youngsters with extremist political views, whether of the left or the right.

"They don't tell you what to say," said Dan Harkavi of the lectures and seminars which the group have had in preparation for their mission.

The guidelines suggested to them which all three remember most clearly are: 'don't lie, if you don't know — say you don't know, and don't be aggressive.' The main precept which their lecturers — government officials, academics and Zionist organization men — sought to instil in them was credibility.

The group will split up on arrival into 35 boy-girl pairs, all working under the aegis of Israeli consulates across the U.S.

They expect most of their efforts to be directed at their own age-group — in high-school classrooms. But there will also be appearances in synagogues, and before Hadassah groups, and Bonds and UJA meetings. They were advised by their ministry mentors "not to be provocative" about aliya. Rather, says Dan Harkavi, "I will explain why I live in Israel."

If pressed about politics, Dan continues, "I will first explain the government's position on, say, settlements, and then explain that other major segments of the population hold different views."

That, all three agree, is the approach which is expected of them — and with which they can be comfortable.

Almond blossoms

TORA AND FLORA / Louis I. Rabinowitz

The word of the Lord came unto me, saying, "Jeremiah, what seest thou?" And I said, "I see a rod of an almond tree." Then said the Lord unto me, "Thou hast well seen, for I will hasten my word to perform it" (Jeremiah 1.11/12)

THE CONNECTION between the vision of the rod of the almond tree, and its interpretation, which is meaningless in translation, becomes patently clear in the original Hebrew. For the Hebrew name of the almond tree is shaked, a word whose root means "to hasten." There is little doubt that it is so called because it "hastens," i.e. it is the first tree in Israel to awake from its long winter sleep, and finding itself naked, hastily covers itself modestly in glorious blossom.

The winter of 1978/1979 (5739) was one of the mildest, if not the mildest in the last 50 years. As a result, the lover of nature witnessed the unusual phenomenon of the almond "getting up too early." As I myself saw, it clothed itself in blossom one month earlier, to the very day, than it does in normal years, i.e. on the 15th of Tevet the trees were in full bloom. With that single exception, for the near to two decades that I have been privileged to live in Israel, the blossoming of the almond heralded the New Year for Trees, the 15th of Shevat, as the Shofar does that of the religious New Year.

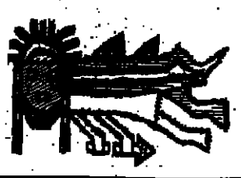

THE ALMOND trees in the Jerusalem (and particularly in my favourite walking area, the Jerusalem Forest) are all wild bitter almonds. (I have found one, not in the forest, which is a sweet almond tree, but I jealously keep its location a secret.) The blossom of the bitter almond is white and of the sweet almond pink. That fact throws new light on one of the most beautiful and moving passages of the Bible, the last chapter of Ecclesiastes (Koheleth).

It is an entrancing description of the gradual onset of old age until "the pitcher is broken at the fountain or the wheel at the cistern. Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was," and dissolution of body and soul takes place. With one single exception (you can look for it yourself), all the various stages are couched in metaphoric language. The loss of teeth is "the grinders cease, because they are few"; failing eyesight, "those that look out of the windows are darkened." And the whitening of one's hair is expressed in the words "the almond tree shall blossom" (not "flourish" as the Authorized version has it). It is not the pink blossom of the sweet almond, but the white of the bitter. It is bitter old age which is referred to.

My husband is a new man... he's relaxed and looks several years younger

My wife lost several kilos... now she looks really fantastic.

After a week at the Sharon Slimming, Recreation and Health Club we feel really fit...

When we arrived at the Sharon Club we consulted a health specialist who designed a personal custom-made slimming and dietary program for each of us. I wanted particular emphasis on slimming and weight control while my husband was more interested in physical fitness.

The slimming, recreation and health course lasts for one week (Sunday to Sunday) and costs IL.9,820. per person, including vat.

The course includes:
• medical examination and personal consultation • lectures on nutrition, slimming and health
• individual exercise routine
• heated indoor swimming pool
• underwater and regular massage
• sauna and various exercise equipment.

The Sharon Club is the only one of its kind in the country where you are taught how to live healthily — not just for a week, but for the rest of your life.

The next courses begin on February 17 and February 24, 1980. For further information please contact the Sharon Club Director or the Reservations Department, Sharon Hotel, Herzliya, Tel: 03-938777.

Northern front and the Olympics

If the U.S. goes ahead with its boycott of the Moscow Games, it must take into account possible Russian counter-measures, which appear to be focused on the Syrian-Israeli border, writes SHLOMO SLONIM.

RECENT SYRIAN moves in Lebanon have served to increase tension in the region. The visit to Damascus by Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko at the end of January heightened tension still further, capped as it was with a Soviet pledge to aid Syria in "repelling" any Israeli "attack."

Most discussion surrounding these developments has focused on the considerations which might have prompted Syria to adopt its new aggressive stance. It is generally agreed that a principal factor underlying the Syrian steps now is a desire to undermine the process of peace between Egypt and Israel — to frustrate the pattern of normalization between the two countries and defeat the prospect of autonomy for the Palestinian Arabs.

According to this interpretation, it is Syria rather than the Soviet Union that is the source of the tension. However, there may be some significance in the fact that Gromyko travelled to Damascus and Assad did not, on this occasion, journey to Moscow. Moreover, the assertion that Israel was planning to attack Syria stemmed from the Russian capital, and was repeatedly broadcast by the official Soviet media as if it was established fact. Nor did Moscow radio purport to quote Arab sources.

From all this it would appear that it is indeed Moscow that has been orchestrating events and deliberately heating up the northern front. An examination of Moscow's possible motives is warranted.

THE MOST obvious explanation is that the Russians are intent on diverting world attention from their aggression in Afghanistan and for this purpose are exploiting the Syrian-Israeli front. With tension endemic in the area, a little Russian coaxing can readily produce the desired flare-up, presumably in the form of a slow-burning war of attrition.

No doubt there is considerable validity to this thesis. But it may not go far enough. Beyond providing a stop-gap diversionary tactic, the heating up of the Syrian-Israeli border may fulfil some longer-term Soviet purposes. It may also be related to the Olympic Games scheduled to be held in Moscow later this year.

The Afghanistan crisis, it should be recognized, has not only jeopardized Russia's policy of detente with the West; it has also undermined the Soviet Union's claim to be champion of the Third World in combating manifestations of imperialism.

Most specifically, the Soviet invasion has severely shaken Moscow's ties with the Arab and Moslem worlds, as attested by the condemnatory resolution unanimously adopted at the recent Islamic summit conference at Islamabad. Even such Russian clients as Iraq and Algeria voted for the resolution which called for the immediate withdrawal of all foreign troops from Afghanistan.

Russia, consequently, desperately needs a cause in which it can still assume the role of champion of the Third World, and hero of the Arab and Islamic struggles. What better issue than the perennial "Jewish" one? Not only does it serve Russian needs through stoking the fires of latent anti-Semitism, it also offers the best opportunity of proving Moscow's credentials before the Arabs and Islamic worlds. Nothing could be better designed to arouse the Arab nation than a new confrontation with Israel.

Whatever their sentiments over Afghanistan, the Arab states (with the possible exception today of Egypt) could not remain neutral in any clash between Syria and Israel.

AS IN THE PAST, new round of fighting in the Arab-Israeli conflict can be expected to stimulate Arab unity. Willy-nilly, the United States would be portrayed as Israel's foremost (and perhaps sole) ally and the Soviet Union would emerge once again as protector of the Arab cause. Arab and Moslem indignation at the invasion of Afghanistan would have to be muted in favour of joining ranks with Syria and the Soviet Union in their drive to repel Israeli "aggression."

Renewed hostilities in the Middle East could be expected to discomfit the West in other ways, too: the price of oil would leap again, and with Tapline inoperative and lines of communication disrupted, the very supply of oil to the West might be severely curtailed. Failure of the Carter Administration to react to Syrian belligerency would also serve to highlight the hollowness of the new Carter Doctrine, which is intended to extend the cloak of American protection to the vital areas of the Middle East.

But there may be a less obvious, though no less sinister, design behind the Kremlin's encouragement of Arab belligerency in the north. Carter's attempt to instigate a mass boycott of the Moscow Olympics would be a severe blow to Russian pride and self-esteem. The Russians have long sought to host the Games, and the privilige has a deep symbolic meaning for them. It would allow them to flaunt their societal model and the achievements of the Revolution before a global audience, and it would be a sign that the Soviets had finally "arrived" and that their system was worthy of emulation.

All this has been conveyed to the Soviet people in anticipation of the great event. And millions of roubles have been expended in planning and preparing for the Games. Were the Olympics to be boycotted by the U.S. and other Western states as well as by a number of Third World nations, the anticipated grand display would be converted into a giant farce. All the investment will have been for nought and all the hopes pinned on the Olympics for adding lustre to the Soviet state will have been shattered.

No doubt, it is this sort of consideration that prompted President Carter to advocate a boycott of the Olympics.

But Russian logic may work in reverse: if the Americans refuse to attend the Games and persuade others to stay away, it might be appropriate to seek out a pretence for cancelling the Games completely — or, at least, for postponing them. This would be an ideal way for the Russians to save face: It would constitute a lock-out in the face of a projected boycott.

A Syrian-Israeli conflict in the spring, involving Iraq and other Arab states, would suitably fulfill Russia's needs. Moscow could declare that international tension prevented her from hosting the Games at that time and that an indefinite postponement was warranted. America's slap in the face would be effectively undermined and Russian prestige upheld.

IF THIS INTERPRETATION of Soviet motives is correct, then Israel is confronted with a serious threat to its security, deriving primarily from the manner in which the Carter Administration is handling the Afghanistan crisis.

In a sense, Israel is being asked to bear the brunt of Russian vengeance and pique at being deprived of the glory of hosting the Olympics. In short, Israel is to serve as the offering for the conscience of mankind.

Under the circumstances, it would appear only reasonable that Israel turn to the upholder of the conscience of mankind — in this instance President Carter — and ask him about the measures he contemplates taking in the face of Russian-inspired Syrian aggression. Clearly it would be insufficient for the Americans to merely offer further supplies and weapons.

If Washington is intent on blocking Russian agression wherever it manifests itself, then Israel's northern front offers the first opportunity for proving this new American resolve.

Israel needs no help from American ground forces, but she is fully entitled to ask Washington to issue a stern warning to Damascus that premeditated Syrian aggression against Israel would be challenged by American sea and air forces situated in the Mediterranean.

In his State of the Union message, President Carter proclaimed that "the peace treaty between Egypt and Israel" constitutes a "strategic asset for America." Moreover, he declared, "Let no one doubt our commitment to the security of Israel." The moment to test the content of these lofty proclamations is almost at hand.

In the face of Russian-inspired aggression, the U.S. may reasonably be called upon to demonstrate that its deeds match its words. If the Carter Doctrine is to have any meaning at all, it must serve to contain Russian aggression by subversion and proxy, since these are the only forms that such aggression is likely to take in the future. And this form of the insidious Russian drive for hegemony is the one which will most endanger American interests in the region.

IN SUM, the Carter Administration may wish to reassess its determination of disrupting the Games in the light of the need to preserve international peace and security. Such a reassessment may lead the U.S. to the conclusion that it is better advised to allow the Moscow Games to go on as scheduled.

Alternatively, if it insists on going ahead with the boycott and making a fiasco of the Games, then it must take into account possible Russian counter-measures which, at this point, appear to be focused on the Syrian-Israeli front.

In such an event, Washington must be prepared to meet this challenge squarely and engage its own air and sea forces directly in the face of naked aggression. It is to be hoped that a clear sign of American resolve to act in this manner will be more than enough to deter the premeditating aggressors. In any event, neither America nor the West generally can expect Israel alone to bear the burden of the Olympic decision.

A problem for the Arab states

"The golem seems to have turned against its maker," writes MOSHE SHARON, who describes the PLO threat to the Arab world.

THE PLO has emerged as a danger to all Arab governments east of Suez, a fact which may shed new light on the current political mood in "the Arab world." It may also explain the insistence of Saudi Arabia on a solution to the Palestinian problem, the recent military moves by Syria in Lebanon and the nature of the Palestinian presence in Lebanon.

In recent years, the Palestinain problem has been quietly transformed into a PLO problem for the Arab states.

Since its establishment in its present form some 15 years ago, the PLO has generally served the Arab strategic aims against Israel.

The existence of an organization that could keep alive the fire of war against Israel without the Arab states burning their fingers brought most of the Arab states to cultivate the PLO. The oil-rich states supplied the money; Syria, Lebanon and Jordan supplied the bases; Egypt and Syria supplied broadcasting facilities and training, and so on.

The more the PLO stepped up its activities against Israel or international aviation, the safer the Arab states felt.

But the more the Arab states consolidated the position of the PLO, the more they built up a radical force which became increasingly independent and which posed a potential threat to their own regimes.

The first to feel the effect of this Arab Palestinian policy was Lebanon, for by the end of the 60s, the Lebanese government had lost its authority in the southern region of the country and its defence as well as its foreign policy had become increasingly influenced, or rather formed, by PLO activity. It became only a question of time before the civil war was resumed.

AFTER THE total collapse of the Lebanese army during the first phrase of the civil war— and due to a pre-arranged plan by the Syrian expeditionary force in Lebanon — the PLO was given a free hand to consolidate its hold on most of the area south of Beirut.

With the central governmental authority barely nominal in those areas, the PLO managed to establish an independent base in Lebanon, which it will not and cannot give up.

Lebanon emerged, because of its delicate internal political situation, as an ideal area for the PLO to act freely. With direct assistance from the Soviet Union and acknowledged by the Arab League as representing a state in embryo, the PLO could afford to become more impudent and daring, demanding full participation in deciding the internal policy of Lebanon.

With the Lebanese government's authority over considerable parts of the country shattered and with the delicate inter-communal political equilibrium precariously poised, the government believed it might be assisted by the other Arab states to curb the power of its unwanted partner.

It was then, in 1969, in what is known as the Cairo Agreement, that the first sign of a new attitude by Arab governments towards the PLO can be detected.

The fact that the territory of most of the Arab states could be kept Palestinian-free — at the expense of Lebanon's authority, independence or even existence — appeared to be a very tempting prospect for most of the Arab states, which even then could feel the potential danger in the growing radicalism of the Palestinian political and military organizations.

By 1970, when Jordan realized that the PLO had got out of hand and was about to take over the country and topple the Hashemite Kingdom, Hussein did not hesitate to physically destroy the movement in his country.

The other Arab states raised their voices in what appeared to be a total condemnation of Jordan, but in fact all of them knew they would have acted in the same way if they could and if they were faced with a similar situation.

Once Jordan freed itself from the PLO's grip, it became very important for the rest of the Arab states to ensure that the PLO deepened its involvement in Lebanon, and particularly Syria.

From the start, Syria opposed independent PLO activity on its soil. The PLO's military activity was permitted only within Syrian-organized and -commanded organization, notably as-Sa'ika. But even as-Saika, which was almost an integral part of the Syrian military establishment, looked as if it was getting to be too much for the strained Ba'ath regime, and when Zuheir Muhsen, its head, was killed last year in France, the Syrians virtually put an end to the organization.

Meanwhile, the Syrians felt that their army was trapped in Lebanon and that because of their involvement with the PLO, they were in danger of being dragged into a military confrontation with Israel.

It also became important for Syria to re-establish the ideal situation in which the PLO carried on the Jihad against the Jews, without the actual involvement of Syrian forces.

For this reason, Syria will now be clearing out of large areas of Lebanon, to build its own long defensive-offensive front against Israel.

THE SYRIAN DECISION to act along these lines is not surprising. The Soviet Union has been very active since the signing of the Camp David Accords and even earlier, in modernizing the Syrian army. Military and political cooperation between the Syrians and the Soviets was demonstrated during the extensive manoeuvres of the Red Army air-borne task forces in the Middle East and Africa, particularly after the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

It is very likely that the Syrians want to free themselves of their expensive involvement in the civil war in Lebanon so that they can prepare for activating the Israeli front. The evacuation of great parts of western and southern Lebanon by the Syrian army, with no adequate Lebanese army to take its place, means that the PLO will be left as the most formidable military power in the country.

Limited by its actions against Israel because of the Christian Militia and the UN presence, the PLO will become increasingly involved in the local affairs of that tortured country.

FROM THE PLO's point of view, its position in Lebanon is ideal. Lebanon is the only Arab country which cannot harm them; the only country in the entire Arab world where they can continue their political, military and terrorist activities unsupervised and unhindered.

With independent sources of arms and money, the PLO has in Lebanon an ideal base: it is close to Israeli territory, yet quite safe; under the nominal jurisdiction of an Arab government, yet totally independent of it.

This power of the PLO, however, has gone too far for most of the Arab states' liking. The PLO's radicalism may endanger certain Arab regimes which it may deem unfavourable. The oil-rich states which have been pumping money into the PLO's purse, particularly Saudi Arabia, are worried at the prospect of a PLO-instigated revolution that would put an end to the present regimes in the oil-producing states.

Such a revolution could bring to power in Arabia political forces which would then effectively use the oil weapon against the West in order to pressurize Israel. The fears of the Saudis, the Kuwaitis or others among their neighbours are not unfounded.

THE GOLEM seems to have turned against its maker. Created as a convenient tool for perpetuating the war against Israel, the PLO's subsequent independent development managed to "legalize" its terrorism by turning the oil-rich states into its own tool.

By persuading these countries, particularly Saudi Arabia, to tie their oil policy to the "Palestinian problem," the PLO has scored a stunning success on the international scene: the oil-hungry West now regards a "solution to the Palestinian problem" as the magic potion that will cure all international ailments, including the energy crisis, the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, the Iranian revolution.

The Carter administration, desperate need of a magic potion to breathe some life into the Carter Doctrine, is hungrily grabbing at the "Palestinian problem." The fact that the PLO belongs entirely in the Soviet sphere is conveniently forgotten by the American policy-makers.

But the Arab states, oil-rich or not, know that the PLO is about to get completely out of hand. There is an urgent need to give expression to its power in a direct involvement with Israel. And it is Israel which has provided the solution.

By offering autonomy for the territories, Israel got itself directly involved in solving the insoluble Palestinian problem. It has also served the interests of Egypt, on the one hand, and Syria and Saudi Arabia on the other, by deepening its involvement in the Palestinian question.

This may yield for the Arab world two major advantages: Firstly, the burden of the Palestinians will shift completely to Israel and the U.S., with a good prospect of an American-Israeli crisis; and secondly, the PLO will again turn its attention to Israel rather than nurturing intrigues against Arab governments.

Campaigning abroad

The Post's* BENNY MORRIS examines the issues involved in the debate over Peace Now's activities in the United States and Europe.

MOST JEWS in the Diaspora, we are being told, do not distinguish between the government and the State of Israel. I have a feeling that this is far less true today than it was, say, ten and even three years ago, and that it is becoming less true by the day.

And Israelis must surely feel grateful for this. It is to be hoped that the bulk of the Jews abroad today manage to affect a total divorce between their perceptions of Israel's current government and its policies, and the state itself.

For the Begin government, by most accounts, is seen by many in Israel and abroad as the most incompetent in the state's history, and its leaders — above all the ailing prime minister — as the most ineffectual.

Its policies pertaining to the future of the West Bank and Gaza and the settlement of Jews in these Arab-populated areas have been decried throughout the world; they are publicly and daily criticized by the essentially pro-Israeli governments and newspapers of the West and are becoming increasingly repugnant to public opinion and to the Jews of the West.

It is to counteract the effects of identification between Israel's current policies and the state that Peace Now launched its information and mobilization campaign abroad. Above all, the movement is attempting to keep intact world Jewry's allegiance to Israel, whatever the attitudes adopted towards specific government policies and leaders.

IN THE FIRST three decades of Israel's existence, Zionist Jews abroad undeniably identified Israel's leaders and policies with the state itself. This was largely a consequence of their support for, or lack of objection to, those policies, as well as of their admiration for a generation of giants who had brought off a seemingly impossible historical feat.

To a growing degree, the Begin government's policies over the past year or two regarding the future of the West Bank and Gaza and Jewish settlement within these Arab-populated territories have alienated Diaspora Jewry, and a degree of estrangement from Israel itself has resulted.

Mordechai Bar-On, former IDF chief education officer, was recently approached by a major UJA contributor who asked: "Should I continue to give while Begin and his policies govern Israel?"

In an attempt to reverse this trend, Peace Now has so far sent two delegations abroad, one to tour the U.S. Jewish communities last November and the other to Western Europe.

A wider campaign in the West, involving the establishment of "Friends of Peace Now" organization, is planned.

The main message of the emissaries was that there is "another" Israel, one with which educated, young, Western Jews could identify, which opposes an open-ended occupation of a hostile people by the IDF, and which envisions a Jewish rather than a binational state, the inevitable outcome of an incorporation into the Israeli body politic of the West Bank and Gaza's 1.2 million Arabs.

THE PEACE NOW movement was recently accused by its enemies of "watering down...support for Israel" and of giving "succour and encouragement to Israel's...sworn enemies."

Presumably, the movement has done this by letting the Jews (and Gentiles) abroad know that there exists a real opposition to Begin within Israel and by stressing that there is an alternative, backed by many Israelis, to annexing territories.

The problem, of course, is not one of hasbara, inefficient or otherwise, or of this or that party representative venturing abroad and throwing a spanner in the hasbara works. The problem of Israel's image and current popularity rating in the West stems from its policies, which no amount of decoration or explanation will make acceptable to a public opinion and to governments committed to principles of political behaviour and morality contradicted by Israel's continued military rule in the occupied territories.

No educated Dutchman and very few educated American Jews will today accept Jewish settlement in Arab heartlands of Samaria, Judea and Gaza as rational or moral. Nor will they agree to an endless suppression of Palestinian national aspirations. Not propaganda but policy is at issue.

Peace Now is attempting in its campaign abroad to mobilize Western Jewry, to bring its influence to bear on the Israeli government to abandon these policies.

THE QUESTION of Peace Now's activities abroad is not whether the movement has the right to plead the "other Israelis'" case before World Jewry. That right has been sanctioned by 30 years of Zionist history, when every Israeli leader, at critical and non-critical junctures, travelled abroad to receive the Diaspora imprimatur for his policies, and while every Israeli political party created and maintained a foreign counterpart in each Diaspora community to help realize its own particular vision of Zionist goals.

It can also be convincingly argued that the ceaseless material contributions of Diaspora Jewry, solicited by Israel, have cemented their right to know and to influence the way their donations are spent in terms of Israel's wide, basic developmental goals.

No doubt many European Jews would be unhappy to hear that their contributions to Keren Hayesod helped set up Eilon Moreh and other Gush Emunim settlements in the West Bank, for example.

The question really is whether Diaspora Jewry has the right and duty to say what it thinks about Israel's policies and to try to influence them.

There are those in Israel who argue that Israel is a state like any other and that only its citizens or those who live in the country or those who serve in the IDF have the right to express an opinion and exert influence regarding the state's policies.

But the basis of Zionist philosophy has always been that Israel is a unique and abnormal state and that it is the home of the whole Jewish people rather than only of those living on its soil at any given time. Hence the legal ability of any Jew to step off a plane and immediately acquire Israeli citizenship. And, indeed, in recent years, Israeli citizenship has been granted to many Jews, vide Russian refuseniks who have never even set eyes on the Promised Land.

IN THE SENSE that Israel is the home, potential or actual, of all Jews, all Jews have the right to express their opinions and try to influence the nature of that state.

This, of course, does not mean that a Jew in Hoboken has the right to influence the selection of the mayor of Ashkelon. But it does mean that he should have a say about whether the Jewish state should become a bi-national state or a repressive state in a manner comparable to South Africa.

Needless to say, the nature of the Jewish state under Menahem Begin, and its avowed goals, have made Israel less attractive to the average potential Jewish oleh from the West.

Major rumbles of dissent have shaken American, French and other Jewish communities, despite ceaseless attempts by the Israeli government to stifle and silence objections to its policies. The fact is that these objections have not vanished but intensified over the past year, following the conclusion of the Sinai treaty negotiations and the start of the battle over the West Bank and Gaza.

It is a vital Israeli interest to see that the growing rift between the Jews abroad and the present Israeli government stops short of a rift between the Diaspora and Israel itself.

THOSE WHO object to the Begin government's policy but regard as harmful attacks on it by Peace Now, whether in Israel or among Jews abroad, would perhaps do well to voice their objections to these policies more clearly and refrain from splitting the Israeli opposition over secondary issues.

The main issue is that the Begin policy on the West Bank and Gaza is wrong and potentially catastrophic for Israel.

In siding with government spokesmen, and in implicitly succouring irresponsible diplomats like Israel's Ambassador in Paris, Meir Rosenne, such detractors of Peace Now are objectively pressing the government and its policies and adding staying power to a government as incompetent as any experienced by the French Third Republic.

THE AUSSIE INVASION

TELEREVIEW / Philip Gillon

SOME MONTHS ago I noted with surprise the number of Australian films being shown on Jordan Television, and expressed wonder at the high quality of these products from Down Under. I pointed out that we had always known that the Australians produced some of the world's finest cricketers, swimmers, tennis players, soldiers, and beer drinkers, but that they were not renowned for their contributions to the arts. Since then that Australian breakthrough into Middle East TV has become a full-scale invasion. With the speed and dash for which the Anzac soldiers were famous in two World Wars, a new generation has seized key positions in the region's television markets. Israel has also been occupied. And, like their soldiers in World War II, the Australian films provide us with magnificent boon companions.

This brings me to a vital and generally ignored aspect of television watching — the way it is educating us. I am not referring to Educational Television or Instructional Television, shows prepared purposely with the avowed intention of increasing the knowledge of viewers, but the television programmes intended basically to entertain.

For many years we addicts have been subjected to a barrage of pompous advice that we are allowing our minds to be turned to mush by spending so many hours in front of what our critics call the boob tube or the idiot box. So superior and omniscient are the poses of these experts that we have come humbly to accept their doctrine.

But this Australian influx is making me rethink my position. From now on I shall adopt a less submissive posture. I realize that, as producers and script writers range further and further through history, and wider and wider through geography, in search of new subjects, our minds are being imperceptibly broadened at an astonishing speed.

Just as the god Moloch had an insatiable appetite for children, so television demands more, and more, and more. Films come, and films go — good films, mediocre films, bad films — and once gone, like people in this vale of tears, they can return no more, at least not for a couple of years in a well-ordered television station. Repeats night after night, as happens with plays and the cinema, are taboo. The result is that "they" cannot make films fast enough, and so search madly for themes.

NOW LET US look at what we are learning about Australia. Most of us knew that Australia was discovered by a man with the comic name of Abel Janzoon Tasman, which naturally resulted in all its inhabitants having very good senses of humour. Subsequently, it was settled by convicts sentenced to be transported because the gaols of England were overcrowded. These convicts landing at a place called Botany Bay. Most of them had come from Ireland or London, and so they developed a curious patois of their own, a mixture of Cockney and the brogue. The wide open spaces of Australia reformed them, and they began to farm sheep, perform superlatively at sport, drink the strongest beer brewed in the world, and live happily ever after.

In passing, may I ask why, if we can import Australian films, we do not import also Australian mutton? It would re-invigorate our menus, now confined to cottonwool i.e. broiler-bred chickens, since dairy products which formerly provided the staples for the Israeli table, have become delicacies reserved for rich black-marketeers.

Now for our lessons in Australian history. These films are sending one viewer at least scurrying to the encyclopaedia for enlightenment. And I have learned that "Against the Wind" is giving us a very fair picture of what went on in New South Wales at the end of the 18th century and the beginning of the 19th. The officer corps was every bit as vicious as the scum we see in power in the colony; they established almost complete control over land and commerce, and exploited the convicts as virtual slaves. They monopolized trade in alcoholic spirits, and became known as "the Rum Corps."

Virtue eventually triumphed, I am glad to say. The officer's power was broken, the convicts were emancipated, and Australia moved on to new heights, and depths, such as we saw in the Jordanian serial about the devilish alliance between that racing man, the Labour Party and the Catholic Church. I think the film was called "The Power and the Glory." Then on to "The Sullivans," and Australia's part in winning two world wars. Finally, we have on Jordan "The Company Men," practising larceny on a scale worthy of descendants of the Rum Corps, but in very elegant surroundings.

With great nobility, since I have already seen these films, I urge Israel Television to bring these wares here, for the edification of those unfortunates, consigned to outer darkness, who do not get Jordan. This will mean that I may have to watch them again, but readers, admiring my self-sacrifice, should remember that I can always switch over to Jordan.

THIS BRINGS ME to a complaint, which I hope will be conveyed through proper channels straight up to the Little King. On Tuesday night I was watching a marvellous "Crown Court" about a dream woman compelled by the loathsome Commissioner of Inland Revenue to explain how she lived on an income of over £10,000, while her declared income from her hairdressing salon was a mere £1,600. She brought three "loving friends" to explain that they had filled the gap. The acting by all concerned was out of this world; the accused, in particular, was a vision of loveliness. Despite her defence, the fiendish prosecutor insisted on a conviction.

Just after the screen announced, "The Verdict," Jordan switched over to its Arabic news, as if anybody was the least bit interested in it, and never returned to tell us whether the jury saw the light. I am convinced that sensible people would have acquitted her, but there were a couple of tough biddies on that panel, quite capable of finding her guilty out of prudish spite. King Hussein, I presume, will see to it that some bodies are amputated at the neck for amputating the programme at a critical point, and that we will get the verdict, plus an apology, next week.

Tuesday night is legal night. Israel has "The Paper Chase," and Jordan has "Crown Court." Fortunately, the overlap lasts for only about 15 minutes, but it is extremely difficult to keep track of American and English systems of law simultaneously, without getting them hopelessly intertwined. Will some programme planner please make the necessary adjustment?

Hart, the hero of "The Paper Chase," really came a cropper this week. Taken by Professor Kingsfield as a research assistant to help in a difficult case in New York, he allows the junior counsel on the other side to lead him astray. With sinking hearts we see him dancing like a dervish in a discotheque, when we know all too well that he should be digging like a mole in his room, frantically looking up law reports.

A scene from the Australian series "Against the Wind."

While he is treading the primrose path of dalliance, his friends back in the old homestead are austerely assembling his brief for him, and they make the shocking discovery that a key case has been overruled. Result: the Old Man will make an ass of himself when he quotes it as his main authority. Frantic calls to Hart. Too late! The Professor has mentioned the fatal case. The judges, puzzled, have asked him if he was not aware that it was overruled. Ah, but Hart underestimated the sagacious savant. He knew all about it. He had an answer, a very curious one, it seemed to me, since he just brushed aside the majority judgment of the Supreme Court as so much trash. But he won the case.

Once more in the classroom, Hart said that he had learned in New York that "To err is human, to forgive divine." This seemed to be an erroneous conclusion. The real lesson was that if your opponent holds out his right hand and invites you to go out on a binge, you should treat his hand as if you are Mazal the Spitter from Ellon Moreh, and, furthermore, you should deliver a swift kick where he'll feel it most. Still, Hart has learned that there is more to law than just quoting cases.

ONE OF the short Israeli films this week was made by an American immigrant, Amir Noy, while still in New York, and dealt with the danger of giving a cigarette to a down and out stranger on a street in the Big Apple. Joel does this, and the next thing he knows, the stranger has become a guest, he has moved into the apartment, had a shower, eaten food, and, worst of all, smoked all the cigarettes on which he can lay his hands. By the next night, Joel and his Joan are treading around their apartment in the darkness while the guest bangs on the door like Macduff and Lennox hammering on the gate in "Macbeth."

The moral of the film was clear: if anybody in New York, or anywhere else, for that matter, asks you for a handout, treat him as Hart should have treated his opponent. It was very funny, and good. But all too many of these shorts are rather too poignant to be the last items of the night.

Most of the thrillers this week have been very satisfactory. "The Professionals," about the poor woman who discovered that her daughter was following in Mama's degenerate footsteps, was particularly good. The one notable exception was "Charlie's Angels," with Farrah Fawcett as a guest star.

At the best of times, I find it almost impossible to tolerate three giggling girls showing their teeth. This time there were four, really too much for flesh and blood to endure, and it is high time the angels were sent to the pearly gates, or wherever defunct serials are laid to rest.

An innovation on Thursday nights is the detailed weather report, instead of the usual useless "Overcast, with scattered showers." May I, on behalf of Israel's most persecuted minority — the Sportoto players — plead for the full report to be switched to Wednesday nights, since we have to hand in our coupons on Thursdays? As it is, we have to work out which way the players wives are betting, how referees will feel after their Saturday lunches, and the state of the grounds. Detailed weather reports about the state of each ground would make all the difference in our search for the IL10m. at the end of the rainbow.

Programme with a pattern

MUSIC

ARIEL ENSEMBLE. Batsheva Savaldi-Kohlberg, violin. Robin Brightman, violin. Nancy Uscher, viola. Nina Flyer, cello. Michael Haran, cello. (YMCA, February 3). Bononcini: Sonata in A Minor for Two Celli. Boccherini: Quintet in D. Minor Op. 20 No. 4. Schubert: Quintet in C.

THOUGH THE programme looked miscellaneous, it had a pattern. Giovanni Bononcini (Handel's rival) belonged to the late baroque period. Boccherini, still "rococo," was an incipient classicist. Schubert was a pure romantic.

Bononcini (as he liked to spell it) fared least well, not because the cellists were less than expert but because their instruments differed so much in timbre. Nina Flyer's cello was what a Spanish virtuoso used to call a "toro" (his own favourite). She was at first too matter-of-fact and dry, and Michael Haran's lovely singing cello most of the time sounded too subdued against it.

The five musicians, however, were finely balanced, with each member making an engaging contribution. Only the towering figure of his contemporary Haydn has kept the fecund Boccherini in the shade, from which he is healthily emerging — his charm in this quintet, one of 113, far exceeding the ever-popular Minuet.

The Schubert was one long delight. Some musicologists find a sagging spirit in the Allegro and Allegretto. All agree on the beauty of the Adagio, with its dark tinges and the vigour of the Scherzo. With Haran as first cellist and with firm violin leadership, the whole work was "heavenly" and the performance had total accord.

JERUSALEM SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA. Enrique Garcia-Asensio conducting. Pnina Salzman, piano. (Jerusalem Theatre, February 5). Haydn: Symphony No. 11 in E Flat. Marc Lavry: Concerto for Piano and Orchestra. Falla: "The Three-Cornered Hat."

WIT WAS ONE of the attributes that all three works on the programme shared. Though the Haydn is an early work (11th out of 104), the quick movements already show his happy temperament. Not so the slow first movement (which links him with baroque form still). Haydn, it is said, never wrote anything dull, but this Adagio came pretty close, and the conductor wisely let it make its simple way without trying to extract more than was there. He and the orchestra did convey the winsomeneses of the rest.

Lavry had the wit to put every kind of display into his concerto (one of two) which he dedicated to Pnina Salzman, obviously appreciating her technical skills. Sure enough, she made the most of all the runs — octave, chromatic, chordal. The work is shallow but exciting, for it exploits the charm of oriental tunes and rhythms, builds up climaxes, gives the pianist lots to do (including passages of cross-over hands) and uses the tympanis (and other percussion, too) cleverly and copiously. The third movement was a time for brilliance to which everyone contributed, but even Pnina Salzman couldn't make the cadenzas more than meretricious.

Despite this, Lavry is one of the finest composers Israel can yet claim and it was good to hear this work so well played by all.

It stands to reason that an able Spanish conductor would give an able account of a Spanish composer's music, and so "The Three-Cornered Hat" was on a good head, so to speak. It was particularly interesting that in part one, Asensio didn't overstress the Spanish rhythms (as some conductors do) and seemed almost to flatten them out. In part two he let himself go — and took the orchestra with him.

Nevertheless, the richly-flavoured suite is more Saturday-night than symphony-night fare, and any lover of ballet must have felt that the dances cried out for a visual as well as an aural performance.

DORA SOWDEN

"MOR-LI" RECORDER QUARTET. Rahel Weil, Naomi Rogel, Ezer and Michael Melzer — recorders. (Haifa Museum, February 2). Byrd: Phantasy for Quartet; Purcell: Phantasy for Trio; Paria: Quartet for recorders (1978); Morley: Canzona and Phantasy for two recorders; Even-Or: "Reflections" (1980); Jenkins: Phantasy for recorders; Hilton: Trio; Linde: Trio (1966); Lupo; Phantasy; Eytan: "Mehumat Hazizim" (1977); Locke: Phantasy for recorder quartet.

THERE IS a revival of interest in an instrument that for centuries had an enormous vogue in musical life, the recorder. It is used extensively in schools, while at the professional level a new generation of virtuosi is revealing the considerable possibilities of this instrument, both in its 18th century and Renaissance styles.

The "Mor-li," a new ensemble formed by members of the former "Laron" Quintet, came up with a programme mostly worth hearing. It created a pleasantly relaxing atmosphere.

Technical mastery, perfect intonation and common interpretative approach characterize the performances of this group, under the unostentatious leadership of Michael Meltzer, who also played most of the solo parts.

The works by the English masters of the 16th century (Byrd, Morley, Jenkins) were given accurate and polished renditions.

Most enjoyable was the performance of the Trio by Linde, who is an authority on the recorder and its technical possibilities.

New outlet for talent

DANCE/Dora Sowden

THIRTY-THREE dancers and 11 choreographers participated at the Recanati Auditorium of the Tel Aviv Museum (February 6) in the first "Stage for Dancers," based on a model originated by Fred Berk in New York. The aim is to provide a new outlet for dance talent, and the first programme of seven solos and four group works was chosen from 30 applications.

The chosen items were certainly worth seeing — and there was an audience for them: The hall was full. Of the soloists dancing their own choreography, three were exceptional. Shulamit Saltzman's "War Toys" explored stretch of limb in unusual angles and achieved them with super smoothness and a kind of fierce logic to vibrating sound (by Gregory Gregorian?). Roger Briant, in "The Presence of the Lord" (music: Eric Clapton), ranged through all kinds of ecstasy from the prostration of the Moslem worshipper to pop hysteria, from "hot gospelling" to slick sophistication. It was all splendidly danced.

Yet most imaginative was Ivan Vaslev's "Grimaces" (music: George Crumb). The dancer-choreographer did wonders with a long-sleeved, loose-knitted garment. One minute he was emperor, the next clown. And it took nothing from his inventiveness that he was a kind of Petrushka — volatile, bizarre, but also human.

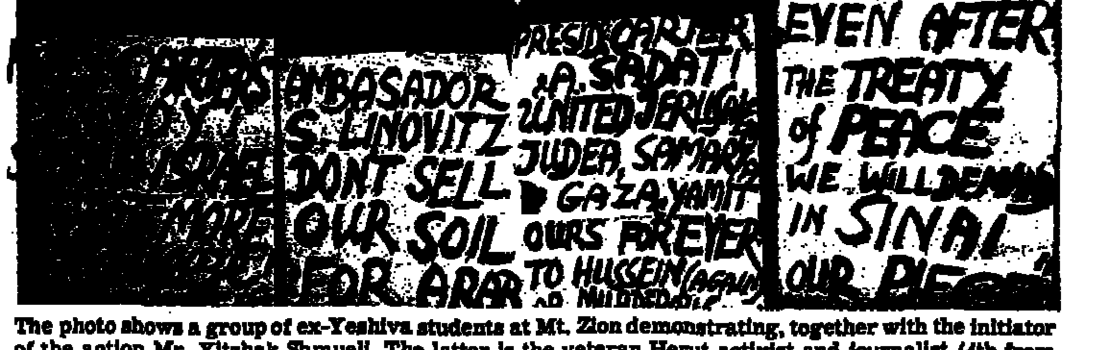

Sally-Anne Friedland Aharoni's "Somewhere Else" was commendable mainly because she danced well. Also performing well was Laurie Friedman in a rather slow-moving "Circle and a Bit More," by Ora Brafman (music: Zvi Avni).

In "Personal Picture," Ornit Rosenblum appeared not only as dancer and choreographer but as poet (on tape). Yet the dance was rather meagre in content. Ronit Raphaeli's "Etude," by using no sound, concentrated attention on herself and was pretty enough to maintain it, but her variety of attitudes often reached the point where it was more movement than dance.

In "Flowers, Insects" (music: Ynam Lif), five dancers of the Rubin Academy, Jerusalem, showed their admirable training, and choreographer Miri Yavetz a capacity for close grouping. Dorit Shimron's "Machine" was an excellent "drill" for students to a kind of disco music.

Two works from the Ga'aton Dance Studio presented a coming crop of good dancers. Ilana Calif's "Impressions," sub-titled "Of a Spider" (music: Moshe Kilon), had many energetic convolutions, but other than a web on the nine girls' tights there wasn't much that was arachnid.

Victoria Green's "At the Circus" had such well chosen music (Nino Rotta), such a handsome opening and delightfully clever ending that it may be ungracious to cavil about the rest. So let's say that the six white "horses" and the quartet of men were charming.

The photo shows a group of ex-Yeshiva students at Mt. Zion demonstrating, together with the initiator of the action Mr. Yitzhak Shmueli. The latter is the veteran Herut activist and journalist (4th from left) who, since the "Camp Carter" agreement, as he terms it, has been in strong opposition to the policy in this sphere advocated by Prime Minister Begin and his Herut ministers.

The demonstration took place on the occasion of the recent visit here of U.S. envoy, Sol Linowitz. A similar demonstration in the vicinity of the Prime Minister's official residence when he received the envoy before his departure, was dispersed by the police. However, world television networks filmed the placards which may well have been shown on U.S. and European screens, as was the Western Wall demonstration against black leader Jackson, initiated by the selfsame "perennial demonstrator." "So, at least," said Mr. Shmueli, "on that bitterly cold Jerusalem afternoon, our devotion to the Eretz Yisrael of the 1967 victory borders was not in vain." (Advt.)

Grand Old Party's fading old trouper

By ANTHONY HOLDEN
Washington

"He's able to absorb facts. But if you walked though his deepest thoughts, you wouldn't get your feet wet."

IN A SMALL, hushed room in Huntsville, Alabama, Ronald Reagan is suggesting that the United States slap an immediate naval blockade around Cuba. He is asked if he thinks it entirely just and wise to punish the Russians by starving the Cubans.

"What?"

The question is repeated.

"What?"

The speaker has to make his point four times, though standing only some six feet from Reagan's right ear, which is inclined anxiously towards him. Members of the travelling press corps look at each other and nod grimly. The candidate is going deaf.

Next morning sees yet more newspaper stories expressing polite concern about the candidate's advancing years. They reached a crescendo last Wednesday, his 69th birthday. Reagan is seeking to enter the White House at the age at which the oldest president in the history of the Union, Dwight Eisenhower, left it.

To the mandarin commentators of Washington, as indeed to his opponents for the Republican presidential nomination, Reagan's age is a delicate slightly beneath-the-belt issue, to be handled with care. To anyone observing him in action, however, it is the matter of the moment, colouring each sight of the man introduced everywhere as "the next president of the United States."

FOR ALL his dark, flowing locks, Reagan has aged dramatically since his near miss at unseating Gerald Ford four years ago. His head shakes involuntarily as he speaks. He walks with the cautious, shuffling gait of the senior citizen, his jaw hangs open, his eyes vacant, as each warm-up man sings his praises.

Like all candidates he has a standard stump speech, though most vary it to suit the needs of the hour. Reagan's does not alter by one syllable. He is reading it from a fistful of small cards, carefully etched with his own handwritten capital letters.

Offstage he pats his pocket occasionally, to make sure the cards are still there, safe inside their rubber band. When he was speaking in a Boston baseball stadium recently, a gust of wind blew the whole lot away, rendering the candidate speechless. Aides scrambled on all fours to retrieve them — returning them, of course, in the wrong order. The rest of their boss's remarks were incomprehensible.

Even with his cards intact, Reagan frequently stumbles and loses his place. The former Hollywood cowboy talks about "dismounting" from his airplane. Asked about the trilateral commission or the Freedom of Information Act, he consults the cards helplessly before admitting he doesn't know anything about them. Asked where he would relocate the 1980 Olympics, he says simply, "ancient Greece."

All this harping on a man's infirmities would be in dubious taste, were it not for the groundswell of Republican support he commands around the country, large enough to take him to the July convention in Detroit with a sizeable slice of delegates. Reagan is still the man the others have to beat.

THE CAMPAIGN is not, however, proving the coronation he had expected. An early warning was sounded in Iowa, where the upstart George Bush surprised the grand old party's grand old man into second place. But Bush had worked long and hard in the state. Reagan campaigned as if he were already president, dropping in grandly from time to time, and refusing to stoop to a debate with his opponents.

It proved a fundamental error. Voters in Iowa and New Hampshire, the states which host the crucial early contests, are jealous of the disproportionate influence they have on the campaign. They like to be courted by the candidates, to have their hands shaken, to share a moment's small talk with a possible future first lady.

So Reagan's strategy has been hastily revised. His schedule in New Hampshire, whose primary is later this month, has been suddenly stepped up.

His wife by his side, he is criss-crossing the state by bus rather than plane, to save money for TV advertising. And he has changed his mind about debating. "I thought debates would damage party unity. Perhaps I was wrong."

The latest polls show him neck-and-neck with Bush, whom two months ago he was beating 10 to one. Reagan is not amused, therefore, when local worthies, introducing the star speaker, jest that they will not "beat about the bush." The next six months will see a long, hard battle.

Reagan seems certain of winning the last primary of them all, in his own home state of California, where victory assures no less than 16 per cent of the delegates needed for nomination. So he is unlikely to withdraw from the race even if Bush continues to embarrass him in New England, and John Connally starts making up lost ground in Texas and the Deep South.

REAGAN'S TRIED and tested formula cannot fail to pick up delegates on the long trail home. As he inveighs against "the Godless tyranny of Communism," packed houses of people much his own age struggle to their feet at every mention of motherhood and apple pie. The actor in him can bring forth real tears as he invokes Abraham Lincoln and the Stars and Stripes.

His trick is to reduce every complex contemporary issue to a simple, jingoistic article of Republican faith and then quickly move on before the applause dies down. "He's able to absorb facts," says Peter Behr, a California state senator during Reagan's governorship. "But if you walked through his deepest thoughts, you wouldn't get your feet wet."

Around the candidate as he travels is a retinue of "issue men," ready to insert responses to the latest developments into the deck of cards. After each question-and-answer session, the issues men rush to the press corps to correct or clarify the boss's latest blunders.

"He didn't mean to say Japs" — an example from last week — "it's just the abbreviation on the card about the allies."

Though a messiah to older rank-and-file Republicans, Reagan may find his third quest for immortality blocked at last by the party establishment. Many bigwigs who supported him last time have already deserted to Bush. They recognize that 1980 could bring them not only the White House, but control of the Senate. To achieve this, they must nominate a broader-based moderate who reeks of the future rather than the past.

There is a ban on the television of Reagan films during the campaign, lest other candidates demand equal time. Americans are likely, nevertheless, to spend 1980 watching the old trouper ride off, for the last time, into the sunset.

Press pigeons and Russian hawks

By IAN MATHER / London

Russian tank patrols streets of Kabul

WITHOUT the Western media, little would be known about what the Russians are doing in Afghanistan. Most Western embassies have reduced their staff to a minimum, and those remaining admit they have little idea what is going on.

On the other hand, every journalist in Afghanistan has had at least one direct encounter with the Russians. Most have been arrested. Some have been shot at, although the Russians have so far aimed to miss.

Almost every story that has appeared in print from inside Afghanistan in the past month, and every piece of news-film, has been smuggled out of the country.

Censorship is total. No reference to the Russians in any context is permitted. No telephone or telex calls are allowed. One reporter who tried to file verbatim the main front-page story from the slavishly orthodox "Kabul New Times" had parts excised by the censor.

To get their stories out of the country, journalists must either make an eight-hour drive through the Khyber Pass into Pakistan, with the result that they are not allowed to re-enter. Or they can use "pigeons," the journalists' trade name for someone who carries news despatches by hand. Overwhelmingly, the material from Afghanistan has been "pigeoned" out of the country.

To avoid the attentions of security officials at the airport, they have been writing their stories in the form of letters, making the first page highly personal. One journalist addressed his envelopes to "Mrs. A. Press" (Associated Press). There is no way of knowing if stories reach head office or whether they are confiscated at the airport.

To find out what was happening on the supply route to the Soviet Union, a Spanish journalist rode north on a bus and managed to pass himself off as an Afghan, so becoming the only journalist to cross the Salang Pass.

A Russian-speaking American reporter, usually based in Moscow, walked into a Russian camp, greeted the sentry in Russian, and was having lunch in the officers' mess when he was arrested and expelled from the camp by a furious colonel.

I saw French photographers spotted by Russian troops rapidly remove the films from their cameras and push them down the front of their trousers. And I particularly remember a Russian soldier carefully searching our hired minibus for cameras and completely missing an enormous modern television camera which lay uncovered in between two seats, presumably because he thought it was part of the bus.

Journalists' problems were eased slightly by the Afghan government's total inability to understand the diversity of the Western media. When the government expelled all American journalists, they expected over 100 to leave. In fact, there were only 18 American passport holders, since the American television networks had rapidly moved in non-American employees.

The government also underestimated the determination of Western reporters to keep trying. Reporters refused admission to the country returned on later flights.

The Afghanistan crisis demonstrates that, in the Third World at least, the modern TV camera can be more powerful than the gun. A group of armed Afghan soldiers who arrived in fearsome mood to take away passports reeled back and fled at the combined wattage of half-a-dozen television lights.

In this context the official version of the expulsion of the American journalists, published in the "Kabul New Times," that the Americans "could not stand the bright light of the new phase of the revolution," seemed a bit unfortunate.

The naivetè of the Afghan government's approach to the media is the most permanent impression. It has reversed its policy twice in a month: first, all foreign journalists were barred, then, when only a handful of Eastern bloc journalists appeared at Babrak Karmal's first press conference, he ordered journalists to be encouraged to go to Afghanistan, and a trestle table was set up in the garden of the Afghan embassy in Delhi to issue visas on the spot.

The policy changed again after a series of confrontations between Russian troops and the Western media. However, the Ministry of Information sent only a serious-minded young medical student to try to control the foreign press.

"History will blame you," he told us, as we circumvented his orders not to leave the hotel until we had been organized into national groups and a corporate plan of visits had been arranged for us.

Gradually the Soviet advisers, who are much more sophisticated, are taking control, and it is becoming impossible for Western journalists to function in Afghanistan. Soon no one will be able to see the Soviet Union's "temporary, limited military contingent" in action.

DUTCH FRIENDS

CHRISTIAN COMMENT/Oikoumenikos

THE DUTCH Christian relationship with Israel and Israelis continues to produce much love and creative support. The people who saved so many Jews from the Nazi Holocaust are still helping today — and in a variety of roles.

Theological advisers to the major Dutch Christian communities contribute to the task of endeavouring to discern the lessons of the tragic past and the challenge of present realities. Genuine Christian concern often motivates the Dutch volunteers who serve in Israel's hospitals, homes for the elderly or handicapped and on kibbutzim. Dutch Christians have become more open to the insights to be gained in the common study of the Hebrew scriptures with Israeli scholars.

The three major streams of the Reformed churches in Holland are represented in Israel by able and well-known Christian leaders. Dr. J. Coos Schoneveld, theological adviser to the Netherlands Reformed Church, serves as executive secretary of the Ecumenical Theological Research Fraternity in Israel and as secretary to the Jerusalem Rainbow Group. Rev. Hans Boertjens of the Christian Reformed Churches in the Netherlands is executive secretary of the Ecumenical Theological Study Group in Tel Aviv, and Rev. Simon Schoon serves as chaplain/pastor at Nes Amim, the Christian moshav near Nahariya.

Dutch churches and individuals have supported a wide range of projects in Israel and the West Bank. The Netherlands Reformed Church, for example, contributes to the Martin Buber Centre at the Hebrew University, to a community development programme for immigrants in Jerusalem's East Talpiot neighbourhood, to the playground adjoining the Spafford Children's Centre in the Old City of Jerusalem, to the Ethiopian Institute for Religious Studies, to the Israel Inter-Faith Committee, to Bir Zeit University (through the World Council of Churches), and to Partnership, which promotes contacts between Arabs and Jews.

A group of Dutch Christian youth leaders became interested in the Martin Luther School in the Old City and helped with its programme. The community development project directed by Father Elias Chacour of the Arab village Ibilin in Galilee has also captured the imagination of many Dutch Christians. Others have helped the Ebenezer Home in Haifa. Dutch visitors have given good clothing to be sold with the proceeds going to the Jerusalem Inter-Faith Committee for Aid to Lebanese War Victims.

(Judah Passow)

WHAT MAKES the Dutch give so much and so willingly to projects in Israel? Dr. Schoneveld responds, "At least in part, it is a growing awareness that Christian responsibility does not end at one's doorstep, but is rather worldwide."

"We have a special relationship to Jewish people," remarks Rev. Hans Boertjens. "Israel is different from countries which we would consider a 'mission field.' Our roots are here. We share with the people of Israel a love for the Hebrew scriptures. We worship the same God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. We have a lot in common, even though there are obviously clear differences.

"The Holocaust made a deep impact upon Dutch Christians; and when this was followed by the birth of the State of Israel, it began a still-continuing challenge to the theological positions of our people. What did all of these things mean?

"We see here the people of the Covenant. Israel occupies a special place in the nations of the world," continued Boertjens. "We reject the theory held by some Christians that the Church replaced the Jewish people in the plan of God."

Dr. Schoneveld also remarked that, "The Christian-Jewish encounter in the Holy Land offers unique opportunities for Christians to gain new insights into neglected aspects of biblical faith, which have been cherished in Jewish tradition. We come closer here to the Jewish roots of Christianity by studying Judaism of the Second Temple period, Midrashim, the Mishna, and the Talmud."

THE THEOLOGICAL Study Group, which is based in the Tel Aviv-Jaffa area and is in its fifth year, is focusing this year on Jewish prayer. Its lectures are in Hebrew. This coming week Dr. Moshe Hallamish of Bar-Ilan University will lecture on Amida, Nishmat Kol Hai, and Alenu Leshabeah.

The Inter-Church Contact with Israel, an ecumenical body with representatives from most Dutch Christian communities, sponsors a seminar in Israel every winter for Dutch clergy and other Christian leaders. Thirty participants were accepted this year from 60 applicants. They heard lectures and joined in discussions on the Akeda; the theme: "Genesis 22 in Jewish and Christian tradition." Shalom Spiegel's book "The Last Trial" was influential in the selection of the subject.

Nes Amim, the well-known Christian moshav in Galilee, is supported by Christians from several countries, and the Dutch play a leading role. In addition to providing a model by its contributions to the economy and to Christian understanding of the peoples of the land today, Nes Amim has assisted in both Jewish and Arab projects in the North. The nearby Israeli Arab village of Mazra has a new community centre under construction thanks to the generosity of the Netherlands Reformed Church and the efforts of Dutch Christians at Nes Amim.

Some Dutch Christians, such as Rev. Jan Willem van der Hoeven, identify themselves as Christian Zionists. Van der Hoeven has travelled and spoken widely in support of Israel.

The Dutch Christian volunteers in Israel have been serving the elderly and handicapped in quiet, compassionate ways, without seeking to draw attention to themselves. They work as physical therapists, cooks, nurses, maintenance engineers, etc. Their unheralded service grows out of a deep conviction that God's love, which they first came to know through Jesus, must be demonstrated in life and acts today.

WHEN PHILLIP STOLLMAN agreed to take a walk round Atlantic City in 1952, he had no idea that by the end of the evening, he'd be involved in establishing a university.

In fact he was utterly shocked when his companion, the late Prof. Pinhas Churgin — then American Mizrahi President — started to talk about founding a religiously-oriented university in Israel.

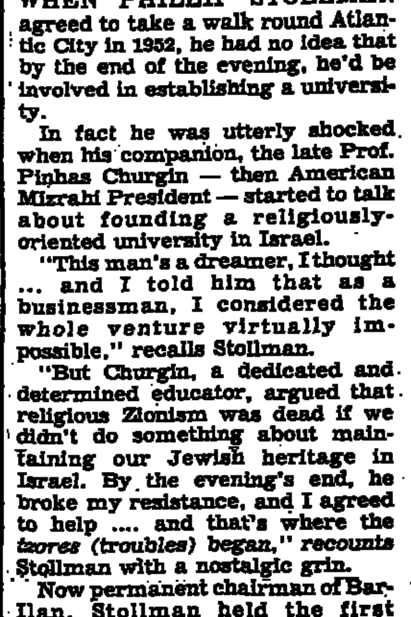

"This man's a dreamer, I thought ... and I told him that as a businessman, I considered the whole venture virtually impossible," recalls Stollman.

"But Churgin, a dedicated and determined educator, argued that religious Zionism was dead if we didn't do something about maintaining our Jewish heritage in Israel. By the evening's end, he broke my resistance, and I agreed to help .... and that's where the tsores (troubles) began," recounts Stollman with a nostalgic grin.

Now permanent chairman of Bar-Ilan, Stollman held the first meeting in aid of the university in Detroit, where he was the Mizrahi chairman.

But the real battle, he claims, "wasn't the money but convincing the Israeli establishment to take us seriously."

One eminent statesman laughed and said, "Why don't you call your scheme a yeshiva and be done with it?" Others groaned at the prospect of adding one more burden to a young country beset with enough problems.

Phillip Stollman

The Bar-Ilan activists even rashly promised the government they wouldn't take any of its funds. "We didn't expect to develop from an institution of 80 students, to one of 8,000," adds Stollman wryly.

SCEPTICS notwithstanding, the young university neither collapsed nor became a traditional yeshiva. Surprisingly, stresses Stollman, it succeeded in drawing fine scholars willing to sacrifice careers in well-established universities for the sake of joining an institution that would combine Judaism with secular knowledge.

With a piece of land from the sympathetic JNF (who appreciated the religious community's contributions to its collection boxes), an energetic director-general, and a handful of American friends building Diaspora support, the university grew.

Other universities opened, and Bar-Ilan was no longer the only competition to the Hebrew University. The government wasn't in love with us, but they gradually became more tolerant, says Stollman.

The Russian-born Zionist's work with Israel Bonds, the Jewish Agency, and the UJA fortunately, if inadvertently, provided him with numerous friends and contacts ("I knew the whole of Mapai").

But the details of his work for the university (which he calls "making time count, rather than spending it"), he modestly brushes aside, preferring to dwell blissfully on that thrilling feeling he has as he steps onto the campus he helped turn into a reality.

His home-town and Bar-Ilan are *so intertwined that he no longer suf*fers from jet lag. And when he's back in the U.S., he isn't really away, he claims. "I know everything that's going on... I don't think a week goes by without me making several telephone calls to Bar-Ilan heads."

THE DIE IS CAST

By YEKUTIEL X. FEDERMANN

THE INVASION of Afghanistan by regular Soviet forces shows that Moscow has begun to execute a plan discussed for the past six months as a move against the West, and NATO in particular.

The shah's departure created a vacuum in Iran and the Persian Gulf. The illusion crumbled that Iran was militarily strong and controlled the Persian Gulf and the crucial Straits of Hormuz, protecting the flow of oil to the West. The fanatic Khomeini regime taught Moscow that a religious mob can not only overthrow a government, but is likely also to destroy itself within a short time. Thus there would be a vacuum for outside forces to fill.

The Soviet Union undoubtedly feared that somehow the U.S., in concert with NATO, would take military action to secure the continued supply of Iranian oil. However, the West showed itself less resolute and determined than the Russians had assumed, and didn't move.

The hostage drama that has developed since the storming of the American Embassy in Teheran and Iran's continued manipulation of the media to insult America have convinced Khomeini, and the Russians, that the U.S. is incapable of military action in the Persian Gulf. To the Kremlin's military experts, America's moving naval forces to the area is of secondary importance as long as the U.S. does not establish land forces in the area of unrest.

The Russians, some experts say, had actually prepared their Afghan invasion as a counter-measure to expected U.S. military involvement in the Gulf area. Moscow was unable to believe that Washington would remain passive militarily in face of the hostage-taking and the da[illegible] to the West's oil sup[illegible]s.

But, in fact, Washington did not make a move, and was, two months after the hostages were taken, still doing nothing more than attempting to unite the West and persuade the UN to join in sanctions against Iran.

THE AMERICANS' apparent helplessness convinced the military men in the Kremlin that they had nothing to fear from that quarter. The U.S., NATO and the entire West had been caught unprepared. Thus the USSR put its military plans into action immediately and moved into Afghanistan "by request." The invasion is one more warning to the West, perhaps the last, that Russia's intention is to move south towards the Straits of Hormuz.

From the southern border of Afghanistan only 560 kilometres will separate the Soviets from the Straits of Hormuz. Afghan forces, armed and led by the Russians, could reach the Gulf of Oman within 24 hours. The Saudi Arabian Army, which is not even up to the standards of an effective police force, will certainly be unable to stop them. Pakistan is most unlikely to risk any military involvement with the Soviet Union and its new Afghan satellite. From Kuwait to Oman, there is no military force to thwart this threat, with the exception of Iraq, whose only interest may be to join the fray in order to "share" some of the Persian Gulf oil wealth with the Russians.

Now the threat to NATO is not the tanks of the Warsaw pact countries in central Europe, but the imminent possibility of having oil supplies cut off, unless its members drop the idea of stationing medium-range [illegible] directed again[illegible] [illegible] one stroke, the Soviet Union may gain the double advantage of access to the Persian Gulf, a long-cherished dream, while keeping the Americans out, and of compelling Europe to resume negotiations on Soviet terms.

THE SOVIET threat to Gulf oil is a fact. The Soviets will make their move in their own good time. The writing is on the wall, and the only feasible measure still open to the West is an American move into Iran, with the tacit support of NATO. Such a move would show Moscow, in no uncertain terms, that Washington is still capable of action in meeting a historic challenge, even if it must risk a localized confrontation with the Russians.

Meanwhile, the Soviet tanks advance, and the U.S. talks. The two superpowers play by different rules. The Russians have no com*punction about lying, ignoring* morality and ethical conduct. America respects morals and national institutions. They speak different languages. The U.S. must learn to understand the Russians' language, and the Soviets must be taught to understand the Americans'. Unfortunately, at this late stage, only military preparedness and readiness to act can still make this possible. As for Europe, it should recall Winston Churchill's famous warning against those who "feed the crocodile in the hope that it will eat them last." The Nazi crocodile of the thirties has been replaced by the Soviet crocodile of the eighties. Whatever the colour of the crocodile, its nature doesn't change, and as surely as night follows day, it will eat the hand that feeds it the moment that hand has no food left to offer.

Since the demise of Hitler, no country has threatened the Soviet Union, though the Soviets have threatened many countries around the globe. The time has come for the U.S., backed by NATO allies — true ones, in deed as well as word — to tell the Soviet Union firmly and resolutely that the days of threats and unopposed conquests have ended. The Brezhnev doctrine was applied, with the West's tacit consent, in East Germany, Hungary, and Czechoslovakia, and now in Afghanistan. Now the Carter Doctrine must be brought to life, and made loud and clear: Moscow stop, or we shall stop you.

Inaugural concert

Special to The Jerusalem Post

HARPSICHORDIST and teacher Laurette Goldberg, one of the leaders of the revival of early music in the U.S., will appear at the Hebrew University next Tuesday, in a concert to mark the inauguration of the harpsichord recently acquired by the University's department of musicology.

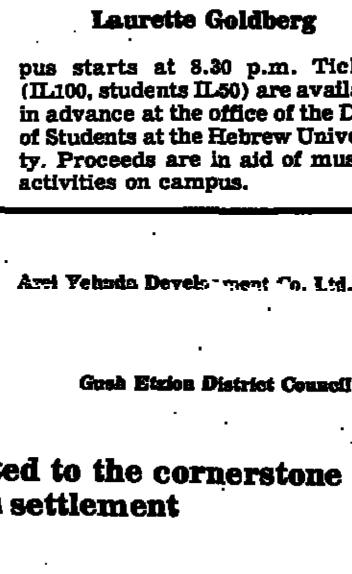

Ms. Goldberg has served as musical director of several baroque music festivals and seminars and has lectured widely on the harpsichord and its music. She is currently serving on the faculties of the University of California, Berkeley, and the San Francisco Conservatory of Music.

She received her degree from Chicago Musical College of Roosevelt University and later studied with the leading harpsichordists Ralph Kirkpatrick and Gustav Leonhardt. In addition to her appearances in the United States, she has performed extensively in Australia and Canada and has just completed a successful European tour. Of her recordings on several labels, her most recent one is the Bach "Leipzig Sonatas" (Arch Records).

For Laurette Goldberg early music is much more than an academic subject of interest merely to the scholarly specialist. She is intensely involved in creating a sense of immediacy about the music of the past. Her broad teaching experience and her dynamic approach to the repertory she performs have made her a ma*jor catalyst* of the revival of interest, in America, in early keyboard and baroque music literature.

Ms. Goldberg is currently a guest of the department of musicology at the Hebrew University where she is lecturing on problems of performing early music.

The concert in the Wise Auditorium at the Givat Ram Campus starts at 8.30 p.m. Tickets (IL100, students IL50) are available in advance at the office of the Dean of Students at the Hebrew University. Proceeds are in aid of musical activities on campus.

Diamond industry says 1980 to be a good year

Post Economic Reporter

The leaders of Israel's diamond industry are looking to 1980 with optimism following the slump of recent years, during which the number of employees dropped from 15,000 to 11,000.

This emerged from a visit of economic reporters to the Diamond Exchange in Ramat Gan yesterday, and talks with the president of the exchange, Moshe Schnitzer, and with the general manager of the Israel Diamond Manufacturers Association, Haim Danieli.

Schnitzer admitted, however, that the London "Syndicate," which sells some 80 per cent of the uncut diamonds in the world, is predicting that the slump in demand will continue through 1980, although price levels will be maintained.

Both men said that government subsidies, in the form of cheap credit, had enabled the local industry to weather the slump. But they claimed that other industries, such as the hotel industry, enjoyed better terms.

Starting in April, local diamond brokers and manufacturers will have to start keeping account books. (The government's demand that books be kept sparked an outcry in the industry last summer, with Schnitzer nearly resigning in protest.) The industry in return will demand more extensive government aid in the form of loan, grants and participation in investment outlays.

In 1979 Israel's net exports of polished diamonds were $1,224 billion, as compared with $1,317b. in 1978.

Gold subsides while dollar is mixed

LONDON (AP). — European gold prices dropped yesterday, while the dollar was mixed against major currencies around the world.

Gold, which broke through $700 an ounce on Wednesday for the first time in two weeks, subsided to $692.50 at yesterday's close in London — down $25.50 for the day.

In Zurich, where the metal fell $8 to $702.50, dealers cited signs that U.S. hostages might soon be released from Iran and disappointment over the level of average successful bids — $712.12 an ounce — at Wednesday's International Monetary Fund gold auction.

Sterling retreated in London for the first time in more than a week. It wound up at $2.3005, compared to $2.3130 late Wednesday.

Call for Help

to our compassionate brothers in Israel, wherever they may be.

There is an opportunity to perform a very great, important mitzva — we call on you for help for a family, the father of which has been killed in a terrible accident, leaving a widow and small orphans.

They have no one to turn to, and there is no describing the extent of their difficulties, particularly at this time when everything gets more expensive from day to day.

Accordingly, we have decided to establish a fund to rehabilitate the widow and orphans, and maintain them in their daily life.

We therefore appeal to you to support this fund with generosity. This is a case of saving life, and all who support it will benefit from the blessings of the Father of orphans and widows, as it is written in the Tora.

With Tora Blessings

Rabbi Ovadia Yosef — Rabbi Bezalel Zolti

Rabbi Yehuda Sadka

I associate myself with this appeal, and ask you to support it generously.

J'lem Sheraton to open this year

By MICHAL YUDELMAN
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — The new $25m. Sheraton-King Solomon Hotel in Jerusalem is scheduled to open at the end of this year in a building which has just been completed, Tel Aviv Sheraton general manager Harold Richman said yesterday.

The structure, located opposite the Yemin Moshe windmill overlooking the Old City, belongs to a Jewish family from Iran.

Designed by architect Ya'acov Rechter, the building does not resemble a hotel, but was planned to merge with the scenery and character of Jerusalem. The Sheraton company intends to invest over $2.5m. in the building's interior decoration. The new hotel will have 130 rooms, two swimming pools, nine elevators, and a 500-person ballroom, Richman said.

Richman said that the hotel has only 150 rooms, although its facilities could easily accommodate 400 to 500 guest rooms, because the family which owns it intended it more as a tribute to Jerusalem than as a money-making project.

Richman said that Sheraton is now negotiating for a suitable location for a five-star hotel in Eilat, where an increase in tourism is expected following the opening of the Israel-Egypt border.

New York wants foreign factories

NEW YORK (Reuter). — New York City, battling rising unemployment and a dwindling number of jobs, yesterday announced a campaign to entice foreign companies to set up factories here.

At a press conference city officials outlined benefits offered to foreign companies: inexpensive and attractive sites, financial incentives, a large work force and the strength of foreign currencies against the dollar.

They said high labour and energy costs, a high crime rate and poor tax incentives had lost the city more than 700,000 jobs in the past decade.

"New York in the past has never done much to sell itself," admitted Peter Solomon, deputy mayor for economic policy and development.

However, he said the city was no longer content to let jobs slip away and had begun an aggressive campaign to make it easier and more financially attractive for companies to set up manufacturing operations. The campaign included a $250,000 direct-mail advertising programme aimed at West German, British and Japanese firms.

Financial incentives include tax credits for the purchase of machinery, for capital investment, for increasing employment, and for rehabilitating old buildings.

Of some 3,000 foreign firms already operating in New York, about half have moved there in the past 10 years.

Farm water price increase opposed

By YITZHAK OKED
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV. — The Histadrut's Agricultural Centre has announced it will strongly oppose the proposed increase in the price of water for agriculture.

Water Commissioner Meir Ben-Meir has proposed that the price of water be raised to approximately IL6.50 per cubic metre, a major hike from the IL3.50 per cubic metre charged today.

The price hike is scheduled for April 1. But the Water Council (the highest policy-making body) voted 11 to 6 against the proposal.

The Jerusalem Post has also learned that Agriculture Minister Ariel Sharon is opposed to such a drastic hike in the price of water for agriculture.

The Agricultural Centre is demanding that the government continue to subsidize the price of water for agriculture.

Those hurt most by the price hike will be the farmers in the south, who use more water than those in the north. If the proposed price hike goes into effect, the Agricultural Centre fears many of the southern settlements will be forced to stop growing crops.

The centre is demanding that the Ministry of Agriculture and the Water Commission restudy water prices, and submit a lower price to the Water Council.

Market finishes biggest week

TEL AVIV. — Most shares gained yesterday. Trading turnovers were heavy at IL252.2m. In fact, it was the busiest week ever experienced by the Tel Aviv Stock Exchange.

Market report

By JOSEPH MORGENSTERN

The index-linked bond market traded in a narrow range, with prices fluctuating by about 1 per cent, in both directions.

The Israeli pound was devalued by 12 agorot against the American dollar.

Commercial bank shares continued to advance. IDB was a good performer with a four-point gain, but it was Mizrahi that stole the spotlight.

The bank's shares yesterday advanced by 12 points, a 2.5 per cent gain. Leumi advanced by three points in heavy trading.

General Bank and Union were unchanged, but FIBI eased by two points. Hapoalim rose by two.

Mortgage bank issues continued to advance. Carmel, both registered and bearer, were "buyers only." The options soared by 17.4 per cent.

Most insurance shares lost yesterday because of profit taking. Zur declined 5 per cent, but Yardenia IL1 gained 6 per cent. Losses were generally not more than 3 per cent.

Good buying support was evident in trading in real estate and land development issues. Rassco ordinary was "buyers only." The shares of Rassco have recently been attracting speculative buying. Rassco preferred gained five points to 162. Ispro gained 5.5 per cent to 211.

Industrials came through with some rather spectacular performances. Elbit IL5 jumped 50 points, a gain of 16.5 per cent.

Israeli Petrochemicals continued its recent strong performance and rose by 7.2 per cent. The accompanying options performed even better with a 12.5 per cent jump.

Elite gained 5 per cent, as did Shemen, which was listed as "buyers only."

Action was heavy in the investment company sector. Share prices advanced smartly. Piryon rose by 6.1 per cent as the giant Clal Israel scored a 10 per cent jump. Pama, among the smaller companies, was ahead by nearly 7 per cent.

Jordan Exploration, however, was experiencing difficulties and its price eased five points. Taal (b) gained 6.6 per cent and the options surged by 10.6 per cent.

Threat from the north

SYRIAN TROOPS are beginning to leave Beirut, and redeploy, still in Lebanon but in a manner suggesting a possible confrontation with Israel. The Lebanese government is in a dither over the hasty departure of the Syrians who, after all, have been keeping the peace in the Land of the Cedars since the end of the civil war there three years ago.

Unless all parties to that old conflict acquiesce in a takeover of the Syrian posts by the newly formed army of Lebanon, so that it could serve as a buffer between the still unbending protagonists, there is a grave danger of the resumption of full-scale fighting between the PLO and the Christian militias.

Another dangerous possibility is that the PLO will go south and start terrorist action against Israel afresh. This, many observers around the world suspect, could be the prelude to a renewed war of attrition between Syria and Israel.

Such a war would presumably serve a number of purposes: while aiming at a disruption of Israel's peace with Egypt it would help overcome political divisions within Syria, and — at Moscow's behest — draw attention away from Russia's brutal invasion of Afghanistan.

On the other hand, Israel has given clear enough warning which Damascus can hardly have failed to note, that any future military provocation would lead to outright war. Yet Syria is not believed to be ready, at this time, for any large new adventure-by-arms.

What, then, makes the Syrians run? Are they running scared, or belligerent, or both? And where, precisely, are they running?

The questions are rather hard to answer from the available information. This may account for the prolonged silence, from the Israeli side, in responding to the Syrian moves. Premier Begin did speak up more than three weeks ago, before Damascus even hinted at any idea of leaving Beirut. On January 14, addressing not any domestic forum but a delegation of Conservative Friends of Israel from Westminster, Mr. Begin divulged reports of a new injection of Soviet arms, and advisers, into Syria.

"We are following developments vigilantly," the premier assured Israel's British friends. "We are prepared — and we are not intimidated."

Then, as Syria started issuing ominous noises, and Lebanon went into a panic, the premier fell silent. In his place, his two deputy premiers put out some dutiful assurances of "watchfulness" and "vigilance."

Yesterday, at last, the premier broke his silence. His audience, again, was made up not of Israelis but of foreigners: the Foreign Correspondents Association, this time. Mr. Begin admitted to being puzzled by the latest Syrian moves. On one point, though, he was emphatic.

Israel, he said, would not allow Lebanon's Christian community to be subjected to a pogrom — presumably at the hands of the PLO and its Moslem Lebanese allies. And that applied to Christians both in the south and in the north, away from Israel's border.

Welcome as such an affirmation of this country's commitment to the survival of a friendly, neighbourly community might be, it fell somewhat short of a statement of policy.

Man's best friend

THE TEL AVIV municipality has launched a ferocious war against the dogs living in the Jewish metropolis. It is a one-sided war in which no quarter is given, no mercy is shown, and whatever weapons the municipality can lay its hands on are being used. Various unconvincing reasons are given for this campaign such as the danger of rabies and the unpleasant toilet habits of dogs in streets.

Dogs have been known as man's best friend since the dawn of history — indeed, since prehistoric times. Drawings of domesticated dogs have been found in caves 50,000 years old. Dogs have served men through generation after generation as hunters, herders, guards, and, most of all, as companions.

Mayor Shlomo Lahat may argue that a great city like Tel Aviv no longer has any need of dogs that hunt or herd, but he can hardly contend that they are not needed as guards and friends. The crime rate in Tel Aviv is high and rising; housebreaking and robbery are such everyday phenomena that the police can catch only a small percentage of the malefactors. Guard dogs are more effective sentries than burglarproofing.

From the point of view of companionship, killing dogs is like killing members of a family. Some people, like many of the aged, have only their animals to keep them company. Of course, Mayor Lahat may contend that the aged too are only around on sufferance.

From their side, dog-owners must cooperate, by keeping their dogs under control, and seeing that public places and streets are not turned into canine lavatories. The problem must be solved by the exercise of sense, not sadism.

HAZE OVER LEBANON

Post Military Correspondent HIRSH GOODMAN considers the possible reasons for Syria's withdrawal from the Beirut area, and its repercussions on Israel.

THE SITUATION in Lebanon continues to be fluid, and the implications of Syria's latest troop movements in that country are still not clear. The reasons given by the experts are as numerous as the experts themselves. There is also no clear reading of what those movements may eventually mean for Israel.

Militarily, all the Syrians have done so far is to concentrate three brigades from various parts of Northern Lebanon into the Bak'a region and to start the process of pulling their troops out of Beirut, and possibly Tripoli. Why?

Perhaps as the first overt step towards ending their four-year presence in Lebanon, which has been expensive in terms of both money and army morale. Perhaps as the first stage in planning an eventual assault on Israel. Perhaps as a way of bringing potentially dissident generals under the watchful eye of Assad faithfuls. Perhaps as a manoeuvre on behalf of the Soviet Union to divert attention from the Afghanistan imbroglio. Perhaps, perhaps...

WHAT MAKES the Syrian move all the more mystifying and serious is the very clear implications the withdrawal from Beirut will have on the stability of the city and the entire country. It is patently clear that there will be a struggle between the PLO, the Phalangists and the pitifully weak Lebanese government in the effort to fill the vacuum left by the Syrians — a struggle that can only serve to fan the smouldering civil war between these factions.

The Syrian plan to hand over each segment of the war-torn city to the dominant party in that area will, according to the experts, not quieten the expected storm — a fact the Syrians know full well.

At least, it should be noted, the Syrians have abandoned their original idea of handing over their vacated positions to the Palestine Liberation Army — ostensibly an arm of the PLO, but basically an irregular arm of the Syrian army. That would have led to an immediate renewal of urban warfare, the Phalangists having given notice that they would oppose such a move with their lives.

The question is, what will happen tomorrow or next week or next month, when the Syrians carry out their withdrawal from Beirut, and what will be the repercussions for Israel?

It is not clear whether the urban instability will spill over into southern Lebanon, where UNIFIL serves as a buffer between the parties; or whether Israel will become involved by implication. The only fact we can assume with any certainty is that the new situation will mean an end to the relatively pacific status quo that has prevailed between the Christians, the PLO and Israel these past months.

The Syrians must have taken this into account, and one must thus conclude that either they decided to withdraw because they intend to create instability, and thereby draw Israel into renewed conflict with the PLO — a move which, if one can rely on experience, will ultimately lead to some form of rift in Israel-U.S. relations; or else the gains to be derived by President Assad from the move outweigh the price in blood that he knows is going to be paid by the Lebanese.

It is because the implications of the move are so clear that one must attach importance to them, and cannot assume that the redeployment is either localized or insignificant. And it is because of the significance that Israeli planners have to take into account a worst-case scenario in working out a retaliatory strategy.

WHATEVER Syria's motive, Israel has been affected. Official spokesmen will say only that the country is keeping a close watch on events in Lebanon, but usually throw in a warning that any Syrian aggression will be met forcefully. It is reasonable to assume that there must have also been some Israeli military response — in the shape of a heightened alert — to the Syrian moves, while taking every care to prevent matters from escalating to a point that would justify extraneous intervention in the region. But in essence, Israel was affected both psychologically and economically, and the extreme vulnerability of the country has been made manifest once again.

The Syrian moves came at almost the same time as the government was in the throes of a debate on the budget for fiscal 1980-81. For the first time in many years, it was a debate of guns versus butter — although the desirability of guns had never before been questioned openly. There were signs of genuine crisis, with resignation threats from both sides of the fence. Suddenly, Defence Minister Weizman found an unexpected ally: the Syrians.

As tension in the north heightened, so more and more support for his claims became apparent. Members of the Foreign Affairs and Defence Committee were swayed in his favour, as were key cabinet ministers.

Thus, by simply moving their forces into a defensive posture in the Lebanese heartland, the Syrians were able de facto to dictate to Israel that next year, as in the past, and despite the peace process, it would be more guns than butter.

The Syrian moves, and the inexplicably raucous headlines about them in the Israeli newspapers (the coverage of events far outweighing their importance) have underlined for the people of this country that war is never very far away. It was ironic — perhaps it was even intended by the Syrians — that on the very day that normalization between Israel and Egypt became a fledgling reality, all eyes were turned not to the south, but to the north.

THERE IS a profound belief among many top military men in Israel that the Syrians are preparing to launch what they foresee as a protracted war of attrition with Israel. The benefits for Syria are clear if it intends to maintain its position as the leader of the Rejectionist Front, and remind Israelis in particular and the world in general that peace with Egypt does not necessarily mean security for the Zionists.

Because of the economic implications of a war of attrition — the call-up of reserves, investment in materiel, the death-blow to hopes of economic recovery — and national demoralization it would be likely to engender, Israel can be expected to vigorously respond to the possibility of conflict of that nature. Realizing the deterrent value of a statement of intent to react with force to even a limited threat Defence Minister Weizman has uttered such a statement on many occasions. The question is, do the Syrians believe that the impending punishment is credible?

That is the vital question that now has to be asked.

Will Israel respond to a threat? At what point will the Syrians know they are crossing the thin red line of mutual understanding? And how do they perceive America's ability to limit any Israeli response?

In other words, exactly when do the troop movements in the Lebanon undergo a transformation from an internal Lebanese-Syrian affair to one which concerns us?

A FEW DAYS ago, a radio reporter recalled the reply of former O.C. Military Intelligence, Shlomo Gazit to a question as to how Israel was taken by surprise in 1973. Gazit showed his audience 24 pictures of a cat, and in each picture there appeared a minuscule alteration that finally transformed the cat into a leopard. The general asked people in the audience to say at what point the transformation had taken place. Everyone had a different answer.

The implication of the anecdote at this time is clear. The Syrians have to know in advance when their movements cease being of casual interest to Israel and in potential conflict with Israel's national interest. They also have to know at what point Israel will be prepared to take more than diplomatic action, and that the promise of such action is credible.

There can be little doubt that, somewhere along the line, Syria's decision to start pulling out of the Lebanese cities and to concentrate its forces is a synthesis of a desire to extricate some of the country's best military units from the Lebanese mess, and obedience to Soviet orders to President Assad.

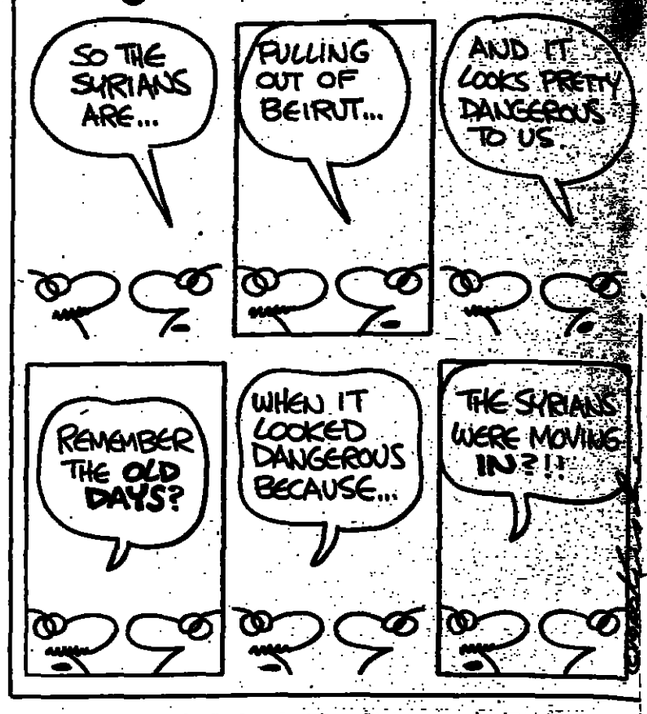

The military logic of Syria's having 35,000 men (in five brigades, two armoured and three mechanized) or 20 per cent of its front-line mechanized and armoured troops tied down in a phantom war with no end in sight, is dubious. At least now, with its forces concentrated in Bak'a in a defensive posture quickly adaptable, by the inclusion of anti-aircraft cover, into an offensive stance, there is some potential muscle to the Syrian threat.

The Soviets need the threat both to emphasize the value of its allies in this region, and also to maintain some control over those fence-sitting Arab countries which are losing faith in the ability of the Syrians to lead them against the forces of peace unleashed by the Egyptians. Syria has long realised that as long as it was tied down in Lebanon, the chances of its leading the conflict against Israel could not be taken seriously. The Soviets realized this too. So did we, and so did the Americans who, in their role of conduit and mediators between Israel and Syria, have found their ability to pressure Israel limited because of the Syrian position regarding war as a still viable instrument of national policy.

Whatever the immediate Syrian reasoning in ordering a major redeployment of its forces in the Lebanon, the ultimate reason must be linked to a Syrian desire either to get out of Lebanon, or to deploy its forces there in such a manner that they can be effectively used, or can be expected to be effectively used in a conflict with Israel.

Just as peace has seriously eroded Egypt's position as leader of the Arab world, so involvement in Lebanon has eroded Syria's claim to that role. Deputy Premier Mohammed Hassan Tohami may be Egypt's method of trying to re-exert its hegemony. The recent troop movements in the Lebanon must be Syria's.

"WHOSE CRIES DO WE REFUSE TO HEAR TODAY?"

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post

Sir, — As a professional foreign correspondent, I have spent a lot of time recently writing about the Moscow Olympic Games controversy. I think four personal experiences I have had in the course of my work are very relevant now.

In August 1968, I witnessed in Prague the Russian invasion of Czechoslovakia and its immediate aftermath — events which no one who experienced them will ever forget. Perhaps the most moving of the many resistance posters I saw there showed three Russian tanks in Prague, each one flying a large Olympic flag with the five rings. A Russian soldier in the first tank leans out of the turret and asks a sad Prague family (the poster had his question in Russian and Czech). "Which is the way to Mexico?" (The Olympic Games in Mexico opened, with Russian participation, a few weeks after the Russian invasion of Czechoslovakia.)

In 1972, I covered the non-sport side of the Olympic Games in Munich. Two days before the opening, a very big televised press conference was held to announce the expulsion of the multi-racial Rhodesian team, which had been invited by the International Olympic Committee and was already in Munich. During this press conference, I asked Abraham Ordiah, the Nigerian president of the Supreme African Sports Council: "Mr. Ordiah, will you use your personal influence to ensure that, if the Ugandan hockey team win Gold Medals, they will be allowed by Idi Amin to take their Gold Medals with them into the British refugee camps to which Amin will send them as plundered and pennyless refugees immediately after these Games?" (All members of the Ugandan hockey *team were Asians, whose ex*propriation and forced deportation Amin had announced only a few days earlier.) Ordiah replied furiously: "I am a sportsman, not a politician! You are very wrong to bring politics into the Olympic Games! Your question is a breach of the Olympic spirit!"

Next day, which was the day before the Games opened, I attended an ecumenical religious service *on the site of the Dachau concentra*tion camp just outside Munich. During this service, in which the late Cardinal Julius Doepfner, clergymen of other Christian denominations, and a rabbi participated, a young German read into the microphones: "When the Olympic Games were held in Berlin in 1936, the world refused to hear the cries of those who were tortured here and in other camps of horror. Whose cries do we refuse to hear today?"

At the International Book Fair in Frankfurt last year, I had a tape-recorded conversation with Albert Speer, who was a member of Hitler's cabinet, was personally very close to Hitler, and was sentenced in Nuremberg to 20 years imprisonment, which he served fully in Spandau. Speer told me how delighted Hitler was about the Olympic Games in Berlin and what tremendous political help these Games were to Hitler. According to Speer, Hitler said again and again, full of triumphant exaltation: "They all came! They all came!"

I believe the most relevant of these four experiences is the question asked by the young German during the Olympic service in Dachau: "Whose cries do we refuse to hear today?"

London. EDWIN ROTH
